

REMAINS OF STUDENT FOUND ON MOUNTAIN

San Francisco, July 27.—Members of the Sierra club, an organization of mountain climbers, say they are certain that proofs they have discovered leave no doubt that J. D. Archibald, a Cornell student who disappeared two years ago, perished in the shifting surfaces of Mount Hixford, which he attempted to cross.

Following the disappearance of their companion, several members of the Sierra club started in search of Archibald. They have returned with Archibald's eyeglasses, parts of his clothing, money he is said to have had and bones, alleged to be remnants of his skeleton.

It is believed Archibald traveled over the mountain for two or three days, but was finally engulfed in the treacherous surfaces near the headwaters of Kings river.
