

STOCK MARKET SHOWS STRENGTH

Little Trading, but Many Leading Issues Move Up Briskly and Show Gains.

By H. P. Miller.
(Of the International Service.)
New York, Aug. 6.—While trading was light during the day's brief session of the stock exchange, and the floor of the institution presented a semi-deserted appearance due to so many brokers being out of town, the market displayed strength, some of the leading issues moving up briskly in the late dealings and showing gains for the day of more than a point.

Whether the more favorable condition of the market will be continued is problematical. The government report on corn due Monday is expected to be the pivot on which the market was turning. In fact, it is believed that the report will be the controlling factor in both business and financial circles. The market seems to be preparing for a movement in one direction or the other, the indications being that the next change in values will be upward rather than downward. If, as is generally expected, the crop report is of a favorable character, the market should show a finer turn.

According to present indications, the farm value of cereal crops based upon the latest government estimate should be about $2,000,000,000, a figure slightly in excess of that of last year, due entirely to the promising outlook for corn. Bankers generally feel more encouraged regarding the money situation than for some time past. In the clearing up process through which Wall Street has recently been passing, banks have called in a number of loans on collateral which could hardly be termed gilt edged. The necessity of keeping down loans is fully realized, and there is an emphatic demand for the management of neither the United States Steel corporation nor any of its subsidiaries had the slightest intention of cutting the price of rails $1.50 a ton, as had been reported.

Number of shares sold today, 105,553, against 83,371 a year ago, $23,000, against $2,731,000 a year ago.

RIDES PORPOISE TO BOTTOM OF SEA

New York, Aug. 6.—A ride on the back of a big porpoise, according to Charlie Penny, of Flanders, R. I., is just a bit more exciting than sailing pink lemonade at a Sunday school picnic.

Penny jumped astride of the biggest porpoise ever seen in these waters and took a trip with him to the bottom of the bay and back, and a joy ride around Peconic Bay for near a mile, while the porpoise bucked like a broncho trying to shake off its captor. It was no use, for Penny hung on.

Penny and his brothers work for Captain George A. Vail, of Riverhead and Peconic, as commercial pursuers of the bluefish. Of late Captain Vail and his men have been annoyed by a school of 15 or 20 immense porpoises, headed by a ferocious bull porpoise, which dived into the hungry school of bluefish and filled them with such panic that they refused to take bait.

In two power boats, armed with shot-guns, Captain Vail and his fishermen started out to round up the porpoises. Several were killed, but the hide of the bull porpoise was tough. Two loads of buckets were wired into his nose and along his side. The fish jumped at least six feet from the water, turned on his side and started away, but soon came to the surface near the boat to blow again. Blubber and oil were oozing from the shot holes, making him as slippery as a greased pig at a country fair.

"Wait a minute, boys! I'm going to have that fellow," said Charlie Penny as the others were about to give up the prize. Without waiting to put on shoes, clothes or hat he leaped overboard, landed astride the broad back of the fish, twisted his feet around its belly and his arms around its neck and hung on. The fish found a new spark of life when his enemy landed in his upper deck. He gave a snort, dived and hit away like lightning.

A minute or two later, Penny was a long way from the boats when the fish came up to blow. He calmly reached around the porpoise's head with one arm and jammed the big bluefish hook-down his blowhole. The fish was then fast. He made another feeble effort to get away, but it was no use.

"Hey, you fellows, come over here and get your fish!" shouted Penny to his fellow hunters.

The fish measured 9 1/2 feet and weighed more than 500 pounds. His blood was nearly as thick as a flour barrel.

Penny declares that Halley's comet, torpedoes and all of the other fast moving things have nothing on a porpoise when he gets busy. In addition, he says his exploration of the bottom of Peconic Bay was more extensive than had ever expected to enjoy.

CANBY EXPECTS A LIGHT HOP CROP

Canby, Or., Aug. 6.—The hop crop in Canby and surrounding districts is coming down much better than expected, but will be good in quality, unless bad weather should prevail between now and the time the vines had a good start and good growth early in the season. It has been retarded by the hot weather and lack of rain; the foliage is light and the vines are thin.
