IN THE HOWLING BELT OF FUN

ERNESTINE was wallowing in the depths of melancholy. Deba, dyspepsia and devils were tormenting her, not to mention that the moving picture had failed to send the new gown with which she wished to dazzle the Langs at their dinner that night for Genevieve Lindekin, and the little black dog had spoiled a white glove, one of her gold slippers and a smashing new purple automobile veil.

The woman next door came in to sympathize, and said there were no such things as aches and pains and worries; that troubles were purely imaginary. If Ernestine would only demonstrate the power of mind over matter, etc. The world is a beautiful place, she said, and life is just what we make it.

Madge Lee stopped to see the Distressed One when he was in the office. She is like a fine, fresh breeze from the seashore is Madge, and the mistress of any situation. She suggested a fling at an amusement park. To one for whom life holds no charms, there is little difference between Coney Island and Riverview cemetery.

Ernestine put on a sailor suit, and the tailor suit she had worn year before last, and a thick, blue veil—when we are sad, we always affect blue. At first she was perfectly blue and walked in and out of the various shows as in a trance.

When the car gave a sudden lurch down an incline with remarkable impetuosity the ticket man told her the park would be open at 10 in the morning. As I looked at her, she was the incarnation of youth and happiness. The torn glove, the dressmaker's negligence, the debts and the dyspepsia were wiped off the sheet and life looked like one long vista of pretty dreams.

Try the scheme, all you who are lonesome and lorn. Fetch along a couple of three friends and take a hat-un-scarum trip. Try everything once and you'll find that the game of new emotions is worth all the medicines and doctors in the world.

"Hold tight, and keep your wits about you," said the conductor. "We are coming to the place where 50 people were or doubt," declared J. C. Beck, one of the Seventh street business men's committee, today.

"There is left no question," said E. T. Amos, another member of the committee. "The necessity for the bridge has been proved and demonstrated. East side factories and residence districts and west side business will suffer if the bridge is not built. Sixteen years ago, when the Portland built a new bridge, the population has trebled. It is almost a public crime to check development by apathy or to allow obstructionists whose motives are selfish to stand in our way."

The opinion of the city attorney is based partly upon the case of Chelsea Savings Bank vs. Ironwood, Mich., as reported in Federal, page 410, and again in 66 C. C. 410. It was a case finally decided by the federal court of appeals in 1904.

"You are advised that, in my opinion, where a city issues and sells bonds for a lawful purpose, which is within its charter power, but which are held invalid because such bonds were irregularly exercised, it is bound, in equity, to return the consideration received. If the city sells the Broadway bridge bonds, and the supreme court should hold that the issue was not authorized, the city would be bound to return the consideration received out of the special fund thus created and if said special fund was not sufficient, then the difference could legally be paid out of the general fund. A purchaser of said bonds would have a right of action against the city to recover the purchase price. Very respectfully yours, FRANK L. GRANT, City Attorney."

Each of the improvement clubs in the city has been asked to send three delegates to the meeting. Officers will be elected, by-laws adopted and general plans made to boost in harmony for the general welfare of the city and take up the questions of civic improvement with which the various clubs have been laboring individually.

It is proposed to have several meetings in the near future to take up matters of importance. It is believed that much more can be accomplished by a cooperation of all the clubs than by working individually.

One of the largest questions to be taken up will be that of water mains. It is desired to attend to this matter before the fall rains commence. Following a suggestion of various plans it is hoped to work out a system for improving the water main conditions all over the city.

The school building question will also be taken up as well as the plans for a $500,000 auditorium.

A Chantecler Gown

The clothes show opened in Madison square garden Wednesday in New York. Chantecler hats, veils and even bustles played quite a part in the clothes exhibition, and a stunning restaurant gown built on chantecler lines excited much comment.

The restaurant gown is of pale apricot satin, veiled with black chantilly and set and bold embroidered motifs in the shape of gigantic butterflies. The hat is black straw, with pale apricot tinted plumes, and the black silk gloves have wrist embroideries in the same delicate yellowish pink.

In another section of the show there were whippers of returning old styles. The quaint old time bonnets and wraps of the Restoration period and the much trimmed skirts of that time are cropping out here and there in Paris styles, though these modes are by no means strongly established as yet.

Fred Toner of Dallas tells Ob-server killed two deer at one shot

Jeff would look at Jim, and then Johnson would bang him. Why, Jeff was so weak that Johnson could push his famous left arm behind him and then, letting go of it, uproot him with the same motion. In my palmist days I couldn't do that to a 15-year-old boy. No, I tell you Jeff was doped.

TERRIBLE TOLL OF FOREST FIRES IN HUMAN LIVES

than 100 men, and it is thought that unless a quick break in the fire is made it is probable that the blaze will soon be subdued. There are many evidences that the fires are being started by some parties who have a grudge at the nearby settlers, and want to reduce their timber claims to ashes.

The call for 100 men for Medford was answered by 50 from this place.
