Remain Out Late to Read Re- FAMILIES UNITED BY sults: Every Bit of Information on Governorship Race Eagerly Sought.

Memories of the old-time political days when every voter was a campaign-er and the fights were almost a matter of life and death, were brought back last night by the election night crowds that thronged the streets and for hours stood pelican-like before bulletin boards on which were flashed the returns. More interest than in the memory of the younger generation was displayed.

In many parts of the business disbulletin boards showed the fluctuations of the vote. Business houses were among those that received the returns over the wires of the telegraph companies and posted them. Added to the list was the bulletin board of the Portland Press club, which was hung from the second story windows of the Raleigh building. Probably because of the number of its sources of information the Press club was able to finsh returns more quickly and more accurately than others. Besides having its own private wires, the Press club gathered election returns from the different

One of the brothers had come west in 1849 and the brothers had come well as the brothers had come well which are equally worthy of a place in Oregon geology.

The geologic history of Oregon as re vealed by fossils, goes back several million years, into the Paleozoic period. In "The Two Islands," recently pub-lished under the title of "Oragon Geology," Dr. Condon only briefly describes the Triassic, Jurassic and Cretaceous systems of rocks represented, and devotes most of his attention to more interesting later fimes. In the Eccene period, the Coast range of mountains was the first deposited as sediment on the sea floor, and after accumulating there many years was raised up by the folding of the earth's crust, thus forming a new coast line several miles to the west. In the Miocene period, great sea occupied the place of the Wil lamette valley, and was cut off from the ocean by many islands. The eastern part of the state was the home of many strange looking brasts; whose remain are preserved in lake beds. During the glacial epoch, the sea again for a short time invaded the Willamette valley. forming the Willamette sound, and strewing granite boulders from floating sebergs over the surface.

Dr. Condon was made prefessor of geology at the University of Oregon in 1876, which position he occupied until Relief in Five Minutes Awaits Sick Headache, Billousness, Constipation, Griping, etc. Your case is no though you may call it by some other From this time on he made a thorough name; your real and only trouble is study of geology, and soon became fathat which you eat does not digest, mous.
