SURVIVOR OF MASSACRE SEEKS REST ON FARM

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Centralia, Wash., Dec. 27.—G. F. Markley, one of the few survivors of the Balangiga massacre of 1901, has just purchased a large ranch at Motay Rock

A few miles from this city, on his arrival from Virginia. He will settle down to till the soil in rural peace, like Cincinnati of old, after passing through strenuous times of warfare for years preceding and succeeding his passing through one of the bloodiest slaughters in modern warfare. Mr. Markley presents a somewhat battered appearance, with various scars and a missing ear, but is otherwise in excellent condition for a massacre survivor.

The tragedy of Balangiga will be remembered as the massacre that cost half Company C, Ninth Infantry, was decimated on the island of Samar by an attack of Filipinos. This was followed by General "Jake" Smith's "hell fire, howling wilderness" campaign of alleged water cure discipline, which resulted in an army scandal and the enforced retirement of the general soon after. The story of the slaughter created a sensation.

The soldiers were eating breakfast at an early hour on the morning of September 30, 1901. Their rifles were upstairs in the company quarters and they were quite unarmed, save for their

The tolling of the church bell and an ominous roar in the market place failed to arouse their suspicions until a yell from the seamy proletariat sent them fleeing. The way to reach the rifles. Hundreds of natives rushed in the place and clustered tightly nearly all the town of men, women and children, with hundreds of tribesmen from the foothills. Against such long odds the American soldiers—about 50 in number—fought as best they could with sticks and daggers, and defended themselves with such desperate fury that the best of the natives were littered with dead and dying before the soldiers were able to escape to the water and make off in canoes. Many of the men who got away died from their wounds, and only eight or ten lived through it. Marley was one, and his case attracts special notice in view of the mention made subsequent offer of a lieutenantancy made to him. Markley is said to have choked no less than eight of the natives to death with his bare hands, and took the others. The chief merit of his case, however, lay in his cool judgment as sergeant in getting the survivors from the field in time to save all from complete loss.

JUDGE BEAN WILL TAKE UP WORK AGAIN

United States Circuit Judge Robert S. Bean has returned from San Francisco, where he held court during the first three weeks of this month for Judge De Haven in the United States district court.

As soon as Judge Wolverton concludes the case he is now hearing in the United States court—last of Edward Laudenheimer against the Cornucopia Mines company—he will leave the jury cases to Judge Bean and will work upon his opinion in the Oregon &

California railroad land grant suit, which probably will be returned some time early in January.
