Neither is it the general policy to cut down old estanlished users to let in new ones. It is the custom to send notice of any reductions at least six months before the opening of the grazing season, and before bands are made up for breeding.

To secure greater stability, fiveyear permits have been put into effect on forests where grazing equities have been pretty thoroughly settled. Such permits are in effect on 85 forests at

Answer to Criticism

Mr. Chapman said that in carrying out its grazing policy the forest service has met from time to time considerable criticism and opposition. He explained that in most instances such criticism was due to misunderstanding. He contended that the service is ever endeavoring to give every man his rights. He also expressed his belief that the condition of the sheep owners is far better today than before the adoption of range control. Under the old system, he said, competition for range often led to the
