Kennewick, Wash., June 5. — This week practically brings to a close the strawberry shipping season in the Kennewick valley, which is fully two weeks later than the season's average for the last five years. The crop has been marked in excellent condition and its lateness has had but little effect upon prices. Local buyers were paying three dollars a crate tend days ago. The yield per acre this year, because of unfavorable weather conditions, was below the average but the increased acreage brings the total output up to previous records. The high mark of the shipping season was reached Monday when 1200 crates were shipped, the week's total being about 4000 crates.

On the whole growers are well satisficated with results, better prices by reason of better express service and perfected methods of distribution, compensating for the shortage in yield. Hundreds of acres have been set to strawberries this spring and considerable to the plate, Yates, Bauer and Gaines also hit well. The score:
