A large high pressure field overlies the Pacific northwest, and abnormally low temperatures obtain generally in that section. The pressure is also high in the gulf and Atlantic states. A storm of considerable energy is central over Saskatchewan and the Red river valley, and light rains have fallen in southern Idaho, northern Montana, the upper Mississippi and Ohio valleys; and moderately heavy rains in Saskatchewan, the lake region, Pennsylvania, Maryland and western Tennessee. Thunderstorms were reported from North Dakota, western Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania and western New York. A light frost was reported from Boise. The weather is much cooler in Idaho, Montana, northern, Nevada, northern Utah, western South Dakota, Michigan and Sasketchewan; and it is correspondingly warmer in northern Colorado and eastern South Dakota, and locally in southeastern and northwestern states temperatures are generally below normal, while warmer weather than usual obtains in the central and southern portions of the country.

Conditions are favorable for fair weather in this district during the next 36 hours. Light frosts will form to night east of the Cascade mountains. Rising temperatures are expected for Tuesday, and winds will be westerly to northwesterly.
