

TURK AND RUSSIAN NEAR HOSTILE ACT; CZAR THREATENS

War Between European Countries Inevitable if Sultan Continues to Menace Montenegro, Says Ruler.

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Cottinje, Montenegro, June 6.—War between Russia and Turkey seems measurably nearer today. Local newspapers print an interview with Czar Nicholas, in which the Russian ruler says hostilities are inevitable if Turkey continues to menace Montenegro by driving the Albanians into Montenegrin territory. A large force of Turkish troops is stationed along the frontier. Russia's demand is another of the international complications that have grown out of the Albanian revolt against the Ottoman government. It follows the diplomatic request of Turkey that Italy restrain her Albanian sympathies, an Austro-Hungarian hint that intervention to save the patriots would not be amiss, the watchful attitude of Turkey's neighbors to the north and south, and the sympathy that has been aroused in other nations in the Albanian struggle for national freedom. Here are international complications enough to have delighted the theorists who a few years ago saw in every Balkan flareup a cause for European war.

Unknown to Outside.
The state of the struggle in the highlands north of Scutari is almost unknown to the outside world; the Turks permit no foreign observer, and carefully guard all avenues of information. But the reconnaissance of the Albanian committees who have come from the field to this country bring reports of success much more encouraging than those furnished by official Ottoman sources. Insurgents are entrenched in mountains in which they are thoroughly familiar, and are carrying on their warfare by the same methods that the Montenegrins employed, attacking from the heights an enemy inveigled into a narrow pass or a blind trap. This was the stratagem employed in the first important clash between the two forces at Tuzi, in which the Albanians came off victorious. Torgut Shekret Pasha, who is in charge of the Turkish forces, has even according to official reports, made little progress in the conquest of the land; many of the soldiers who were detailed for the campaign have been stricken under the attacks of an unseen foe and were returned as unfit for the service. One company of 300 Anatolians was dismissed on the day of its arrival at Scutari.

The hope of the Albanians to hold out rests largely upon their ability to obtain supplies for carrying on the warfare. They have according to the reports of their committee a good supply of arms, which would seem to indicate that the disarmament was not as complete as the Turks believed. Their great need is ammunition, which in account of Turkish surveillance is with difficulty smuggled into the country. Most of the men are barefooted, as the opankas which they wear will stand only a few days' march in the rocky mountain paths. Their food supply is almost exhausted, as their farms and houses, which they deserted when they fled to the mountains, have been destroyed and their cattle driven away by the invaders.

Italy Assists.
To furnish supplies has been the part of Albanians and their sympathizers in other countries. Through the activity of agents in America considerable sums have been given by people of Albanian descent. But the bulk of assistance has come from Italy, where in the past many Albanians have sought refuge from Turkish oppression. In her efforts to prevent the organizing of filibustering expeditions Italy has been compelled to use extreme measures that have provoked some unfavorable criticism. Correspondents in Rome complain that the censorship has been so severe that it is almost impossible to send by the ordinary channels any news concerning these expeditions. Practical nothing has been allowed to come out respecting the expedition which Ricciotti Garibaldi is credited with fitting out. Members of the various Albanian committees scattered throughout Italy have been under police surveillance, and the government followed up the expedition of Ivanney Bey, the Albanian patriot, by domiciliary visits to the members of the Albanian committees and the seizure of a large number of documents. Garibaldi and others cooperating with him have been warned that they will be arrested should they attempt to leave Italy to carry on war in Albania. Additional gunboats have been sent to the Adriatic and every point of departure is closely watched.

WHO DREW MOST ATTENTION--- WOMAN, HAREM SKIRT, OR MAN?

Countless men paid deference to a mere-man and his courage this morning. During the height of the crowds following the circus parade and preceding the passing of Rex Oregonus on Morrison street, a woman gaily attired in a green and gold harem suit, perfectly tailored but perfectly harem like nevertheless, appeared on the street, visited a number of stores, entered and left the postoffice and in fact was seen by pretty nearly everybody downtown. Harem skirts have made their appearance before in Portland this spring but this is the first time, so far as known, that any man has walked along with one. The lady's escort seemed totally unconcerned over the commotion caused by his companion's attire and the two walked along and chatted together as though there weren't a spectator nearer than Seattle.

HORSE, COW, MAN, COUGAR IN TANGLE

Though Wound by Tether Rope Farmer With Last Shell Wounds Varmint.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Centralia, Wash., June 6.—Returning from a trip to the mountains near Alpha yesterday, A. P. Snider of this place brought back the pelt of a huge cougar as the trophy of an adventure which took place two days previously.

Snider was proceeding along a trail through the woods on horseback, leading a heifer, when the young bovine gave a terrified bellow and dashed forward. The horse also plunged in and frightened and its rider then saw a crouching form behind a tree, resting on its haunches as though it had been waiting for him.

Snider whipped out his 45 Colt's and fired. His horse shied and the heifer began to encircle horse and rider with its tether rope, winding the farmer in his saddle. Unable to proceed with the rope wound around it, and frightened by the panic of the heifer, the horse plunged madly, while the cougar mounted a nearer tree ready to spring upon the trio.

Snider tried again and again and missed as the cougar plunged. With but one more cartridge in his revolver, he took a desperately steady aim, determined to follow the shot by flinging the weapon at the beast in case of another miss, but the shot took effect. With a screech of rage and pain, the cougar dropped from the tree to the ground, where it was later dispatched with a stab from the tether-stake by Snider.
