Ashley, who is giving a card afternoon for her tomorrow.

In their home, embowered with hundreds of beautiful pink and white peonies, Mr. and Mrs. C. Lewis Mead last night received about 200 friends in celebration of their tenth wedding anniversary. The idea of the tin wedding was skillfully carried out in the decorations with chains of tin and in the refreshments which were served on tin. The reception hall and drawing room were all in white, peonies with palms and other beautiful greens for a background. About the walls were banked gorgeous floral offerings sent by the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Mead. Pink peonies with electric light gleaming through the green was the artistic plan of decoration in the living room and in the dining room the same sweet blossoms arranged in festoons with the tin chains were used. Receiving with Mrs. Mead were Mrs. Mary A. Wells, an aunt from San Francisco, and Mr. and Mrs. Norton G. Wells, cousins from Los Angeles. Mrs. Horatio Wells, Mrs. W. B. Fochheimer, Mrs. Henry Dickson and Mrs. Chester Deering assisted about the rooms. Ropebrook's orchestra was stationed in the hall on the second floor.

The lodge at Spokane is in August we will give the interesting work of the Odin degree, Spokane having a splendidly drilled team for that purpose. What's the Use?

By Darra More. WHEN the belle of Baltimore announced her engagement to a man of no attractions whatsoever, her friends perplexedly asked, "Why?" "Because I am of a very jealous nature," responded the wise one. "If I married a handsome man, I know I would be wildly jealous of him. If he were attractive to other women, I should be miserable. I am going to marry a man whom no one else will look at, and be happy." And the belle of Baltimore lived in peace and security ever after.

The belle of Portland married a handsome man, and she is crying her eyes out over him. The man is perfectly harmless. He likes admiration, and he gets it. Wife makes mountains out of molehills. And she is miserable. And she makes her husband miserable. The home life of this couple is a riot of petty jangles. She cries and he gets mad. Whenever husband is out of wife's sight, she thinks he is lurching the stenographer or taking tea with an actress; when he praises another woman for her beauty or her cleverness, wife is enraged and suspicious all manner of things; whenever husband is in a brown study trying to figure out how to pay the milliner and the dressmaker, wife thinks he is haunted by some pretty face.

Now, what's the use, wife; what's the use? In matrimony there is a lot that mother never told you about. The Mary who is an angel, or the John who is perfect, is a myth. We are all a pretty bad lot. We can only make the most of what we've got. So don't expect too much of a mere man, Mary, and look to yourself.

Why did your husband choose you out of all the women of his acquaintance for his wife? Think it over. If you'll keep up the illusion, you'll be happy, and so will John. Don't harbor suspicions of your husband's little foibles. If you must be suspicious, don't let your husband know it, for if you do, you will drive him to do the very thing that you fear. Trust. Have faith. If you can't do it honestly, at least pretend. And, by all means, don't go out shooeking. You might find something that would really shock you. Don't do it. There are so many things that we are happier in not knowing.

Flatter your husband, but don't love him to death. Remember the terrible experience of that other Baltimore lady, who in the generosity of her loving temperament wanted to give her Charley 46 kisses—and he turned her down cold and beat her.

Remember that your husband is probably too busy trying to support you to indulge in flirtations; that your husband married you that he might ever have an admiring audience, not a reforming agent; that a man will stay most where he likes it best. Don't cry. Don't fuss. It only makes you old and haggard. Smile, smile, smile; believe me, it is the only way to play the game to win. If husband wants to stray, nothing in the world or out of it can stop him. So, what's the use; what's the use?

The Perfect Housewife.

In the interim of denying that New York was suffering from a "wave of crime," Mayor Gaynor was invited the other day to address a girls' graduating class. According to a New York exchange, he said: "Every girl ought to be taught to cook, to wash and to keep house, even though her little hands are spotted. Men are afraid to marry today because the girls do not know these things. A man has much greater affection for a woman who knows these things than for one who does not." After reading the good mayor's remarks, one feels bound to comment that they have reference to conditions of society now outgrown, and enlightened feminine opinion, no less in Pendleton than elsewhere, will regard them as reactionary.

In the present social scheme there is no demand for housewifely accomplishments. The apartment house and the delicatessen store have changed the old order of things and rendered them superfluous. There is now-a-days no more reason why a wife should know how to bake than to card wool. The baker does that for her; a steam laundry does her washing, and when it comes time to "clean house" a gentlemanly attendant appears with a paste-brush, applies the dusters, relieves her of that ordeal. Manufacturers of food products prepare her soups and put up her preserves for her, professional caterers superintend her dinners, even to supplying a butler, and the odds and ends of household work are attended to by a janitor.

To require girls at this day to learn "to cook, to wash and to keep house" in preparation for marriage is to sacrifice the essentials to the superfluous. It means the loss to them of time that could be more profitably spent in training for the serious occupations of leisurely modern matrimony, such as bridge, club meetings and participation generally in woman's higher interests.

Putting on a Button.

When buttons are to be sewn on, use a coarse thread instead of a double one which is likely to leave one thread a little looser than the other. The knot in the thread may be concealed in the right side, under the button. Pass the needle and thread through the button several times to make it secure, and before finally fastening the thread, wind it several times around the button and fasten it on the wrong side.

Toast.

Any of the toasts are good for the Sunday evening lunch, but this one seems more appropriately to belong to this time than do any of the others. French Nightcaps—Dip slices of stale white bread in milk and sugar, sprinkle with cinnamon, fry in a little butter and serve with jelly. Golden Cream Toast—Cut stale bread in fancy shapes and toast an even brown. Make a cream sauce, cover each slice of toast with this while hot, then sprinkle with the yolks of two hard boiled eggs pressed through a ricer. Jelly Toast—Butter six or eight slices of hot toast. Melt a little less than half a glass of jelly and pour over, or spread the jelly without melting. Whip a small bottle of cream, sweeten slightly, and place two tablespoons on each piece of jelly toast.
