

BRIDGES ASSERTS SEE'S AMBITION WAS TOGETHER MONEY

Father of High Priestess of Absolute Life Cult, Tells of His Efforts to Get Daughter.

(United Press Leased Wire.) Chicago, June 19.—Stephen Bridges, father of High Priestess Mildred Bridges of the Absolute Life cult of Evelyn Arthur See, today told of his relations with the "reveler" of the cult, and the efforts he made to get the girl from the "junior commonwealth."

"See's ambition," Bridges testified, "seemed to be to get money. Punishment was threatened his followers who at that time he knew that Mona Rees lived with See, who said her presence was necessary to his spiritual welfare."

"At first my daughter Mildred had no use for See," the witness continued. "Once, when I returned from a trip to the Pacific coast in 1909, I found my wife out of the city and my daughter living at the junior commonwealth. She was then completely dominated by See."

"Bridges denied that he used vile language in the presence of his daughter. He identified a letter he had received from Mildred, then 15, which reproached him in mature language for swearing in her presence."

AGED COUPLE WAR WIDOWS

E. G. Harvey Claims Relic as Does His Divorced Wife—Both Are Firm.

"Widow's row," Portland, famous nest of old time romances, figures prominently today in the case of Edward G. Harvey against Frances Harvey, in the circuit court. Judge Adams is hearing the two old people tell their stories about their respective ownership of an old table, which ownership they failed to settle last September, when a divorce was granted Mrs. Harvey at Oregon City.

In the days when "widow's row," north side of Washington street, between Park and West Park, was in the height of popularity as a center for boarding houses, Mrs. Harvey was the proprietor of such a house. Mr. Harvey was a boarder. This was previous to 1890, in which year the two people were married. Mrs. Harvey asserts her husband gave her the table in question as a wedding gift. The husband says the table belonged to an old Russian family, who gave it to him in Alaska in 1879.

"I wouldn't part with the table for anything," said Mr. Harvey. "I never saw a woman I would give it to."

BOY GENIUS' FATHER ASSAILS METHODS OF RAISING YOUNG

Professor Boris Sidis, Parent of 12-Year-Old Harvard Sensation, Issues Treatise on Proper Care of Children.

(United Press Leased Wire.) New York, June 19.—Professor Boris Sidis, M. A., Ph. D., M. D., father of the 12-year-old genius who created a sensation at Harvard, has issued a treatise on the proper care of children, which bitterly assails present educational methods.

Present methods, he asserts, are calculated to produce the largest possible number of mediocrities. His own son, Dr. Sidis says, far from being harmed by the course of study he has followed, is in far better physical condition than the average schoolboy four years his senior.

Education, Dr. Sidis says, should begin when the child is 3 years old. "By answering questions," he continues, "the child will acquire knowledge with the same ease that he learns to ride a bicycle. By his tenth year he will have acquired knowledge which at the present time the university graduate only obtains with infinite labor and pain."

Here are some of the things that are wrong with the common schools, as Dr. Sidis sees it: The American nation entrusts the fate of its younger generations to the carelessness of young girls or the tre of old maids, all ruled by pettifogging officials entrusted with educational red tape methods and routine. America's school systems are ruled by bureaucrats.

Never in history have school teachers fallen to such a low level of mediocrity. American children at 19 are little brutes, and waste their most precious years in unsanitary school rooms.
