There is no let up at the Orpheum this week. The new bill is filled to the brim with variety of the sort which scores.

The feature act is another of Jesse L. Lasky's minute musical comedies, "The Photo Shop." As usual, the set is perfect in all details.

Gene Greene, very drowsy, made a big hit with his "Study in Song," assisted by Charles Straight, at the piano.

Back again is "General" Edward Lavine, the friend of all good Orpheumites, with his own elaborate set and his own ideas of comedy with a little juggling thrown in.

Harry Sullivan and his company present the sketch, "The Favorite," a race track episode, which does not differ largely from others of the sort except that a thrilling race is introduced with motion pictures.

Marcel and Boris trio, strong men of a new type, and two versatile boys, open the bill with some exceptional hand balancing and novelty musical stunts.
