WHAT EVERY MAN KNOWS

Written for The Journal by Darra Moore. "I wish I had not forgotten my mother's teachings," because she knew what she was talking about and women she could read like a book. She would have saved me fifty thousand dollars and got me a wife. I might have got a good woman in a country town who would have played the square with me and been kind to me in my old age, but I thought I could get a "Noble skirt."

These words came from the lips of an Iowa farmer after he had been "stung" for $50,000 by a dashing young temptress whose picturesque appearance invariably causes comment and admiration wherever men congregate. There are many "farmers" who follow the call of the Bird of Paradise, and "come to" with the same little old refrain. We hear men talk a lot about the modest brown wren, we hear them eulogize her as their ideal of womanhood, but when the hand begins to play, it is always the Bird of Paradise that wears the imperial badge of the favorite. And, as men luxuriate in the luring glow of her golden head and the hypnotic daze of her bridgework breast, he whispers to himself, "How in the world did I ever stand that common, every-day little brown wren? She was a nice, comfortable little bird, but why bother with her kind, when I can get such a sun-burst of fascinations?" And, when in this mood, he never stops to count the cost. He drifts along caring not whether nor when, lulled to a disregard of everything under Heaven, but the enticements of his sinuous charmer. But, there comes a terrifying moment, a moment when his heart stops beating, and his cheek is blanched. The brilliant outlines of the Bird of Paradise fade and in their stead appear the hideous talons of the vulture. The sneering, mocking vision throws back at him an empty purse, and then, he understands. No longer possessing that upon which gorgeous Birds of Paradise feed, he is turned into the street.

Then, he remembers Mother and her teachings, and the little farm that he has sold to gratify the whims of his enchantress. And, finally, he thinks of the little Brown Wren that he discarded. Somehow, he scrapes together enough money to go to the little country town where the little Brown Wren lives. She is still just a commonplace, uninteresting little country girl, but her eyes are honest, her lips pure and her plain little gingham dress spotless. He tells her how he has lost his hard-earned money in speculation in the city. He tells her how he has always admired her simple clothes, her quiet manner and her wholesome thoughts. He tells her she is the only woman he has ever loved, that all his life he has been waiting for this day.

"I haven't anything but an honest heart to offer you, but will you marry me little Brown Wren?" he asks. And, the little Brown Wren puts out her hand and draws him close to her breast as she replied: "How good, how brave, how many you are! I'm sorry your speculations have turned out badly, but never mind. I have been saving up my money for ever so many years, and I have enough to buy you a little home, where we can start all over again." And she kissed him ever so prettily, and murmured: "I'm so glad I'm the only woman you ever loved, for I have always loved you, you are the only sweetheart I've ever had. I'll always love you."

And, he knew she told the truth.

Jellied Prunes. Stew about two dozen large prunes over when cold remove the stones. Take the same amount of almonds, blanch and brown them and put one in each prune. Take half a cupful of gelatin and put over it just enough cold water to cover. Heat the juice the prunes were cooked in, measure one pint and pour over the gelatin; have the juice boiling hot. Add half a cupful of sugar and the juice of three lemons, strain and pour over the prunes. Put this in a mold, and when served, cut a piece from the center and fill with whipped cream, or use for a salad with mayonnaise dressing.

June. Me thought that winter, love, would never end. That the dark year had slain the innocent May. Nor hoped that your soft hand, this summer day would be as now, in mine, beloved friend!

And, like some magic spring, your dream deep eyes Hold all the summer skies.

But lo! the world again is mad with flowers. The long white silence spoke, small bird by bird, Blackbird, thrush, amid the song of showers.

The grass stole back once more and there was heard The ancient music of the vernal spheres, Half laughter and half tears.

Ah! love, and now too swiftly, like some groom, Raining hot kisses on his bride's hair, The mad young year, delirious with the south, Squanders his fairy treasure, bloom on bloom.

Too soon the wild rose hastens to be sweet, Too swift, O June, thy feet!

Tarry a little, summer, crowd not so All glory and gladness in so brief a Teach all thy dancing flowers a step more slow.

And bid thy wild muscians softer play, O haet thou thought, that like a mad-maid, The longest summer ends.—Richard Le Gallienne in the Columbian.
