Twenty-five cents a pound is now being offered here for select growths of the coming hop crop. One sale of 1910s was made between dealers but the price was not made public. The market for hops is stronger in all sections.

Present prospects are for a hop crop of 95,000 to 100,000 bales in the state of Oregon. A rain or two within the next week or 10 days will insure the higher estimate according to leading operators.

Last year's crop of hops in Oregon was estimated from 92,500 to 97,500 bales but it is now generally conceded that this year's output will be greater than a year ago, if nothing happens from this time forth.

George Dorous, the well known hopman who has just returned from an extensive trip through the Willamette valley fields confirms the reports of excellent promise for the coming hop crop.

"While there are some very poor yards in the valley," he told The Journal this morning, "the yards in general look good, in fact fully as good as a year ago. I never saw a season when there was so much hop in the valley as there is now and therefore this year is no exception."

"My idea at present, after a trip through the hop sections, is that an estimate of 100,000 bales for the 1911 yield will not be far out of the way. A few showers would do wonders."

The market for hops is very firm. A number of additional contracts are reported written in California at 25c a pound but nothing over 25c is reported here recently. According to a prominent dealer, the reason why dealers are so much interested in the hop contract in California this season than in Oregon, is because California growers have never been known to get out of a contract while the hop crop is in the state. No business in the local spot market is reported and prices are nominally the same.

English crop advances continue to note the presence of vermin but the situation is said to be somewhat improved. There is no change in Continental crop advances.

A New York advance says that the market there has strengthened again owing to an increased demand for 1910 and older hops. There were sales of several hundred bales at full quotations.

New York state hop yards show a mixed condition with some of good quality and others only fair.
