

PROGRESSIVES ARE RIVEN ASUNDER; STRENGTH IS GONE

Questions of Reciprocity and Direct Election of Senators Split Insurgents in Twin—No Help in Sight.

(Washington Bureau of The Journal.)
Washington, D. C., June 23.—Followers of the progressive movement in national politics have been taking account of stock, and ascertaining to what degree recent divisions of their forces have spoiled what looked like brilliant prospects for success in 1912.

came on two great issues—direct election of senators and reciprocity, and the division appears to be for the present hopeless.

The amendment to the federal constitution providing for popular election of senators goes to the states with the proviso attached that the congress shall have supervision of elections of senators in several states. It was attached through adoption of the amendment of Senator Bristow, of Kansas, to the resolution of Senator Borah, of Idaho, for submission to the states. On this Bristow amendment the progressives divided and cannot be cemented again.

On reciprocity, the same division occurred. It was acknowledged that the president proposed Canadian reciprocity largely to "put the progressives in a hole," and that he succeeded, because some of the progressives failed to see that, if they fought reciprocity, they would help Taft, whom they wanted to defeat, and whom, apparently, that could have defeated, had they not erred on that issue. Those progressives who took the stand against reciprocity have gone too far to recede; so that they have simply helped the man they hoped to hurt. In short, the progressives who opposed reciprocity, made poor political guesses and failed to gauge popular sentiment.

As to popular election of senators, the opinion is expressed here quite generally that enough southern states will reject the constitutional amendment to prevent getting the requisite three-fourths majority of the states for the proposal. Of course, it cannot be asserted, yet it is the better guess in advance that enough states will adopt it with the Bristow amendment to incorporate it in the national constitution.

However, on two great issues of the special session, the progressive forces have been riven asunder, and it cannot be denied that in a sense the two factions of progressivism stand glaring at each other, with not too cordial feeling back of the glaring.

Under these conditions, standpatters are disposed to dance in mad glee at what they profess to believe is the ultimate disintegration of the progressive movement. That, certainly, is a very foolishness. The progressive movement having been based upon a moral issue, higher and more fundamental than any specific issues that have arisen, it cannot be wrecked by existing divisions among certain of the men who have been leading the progressive movement.

Men who see deeper than the surface realize that the American people have been aroused as not before in a half century; that it is not a superficial affair, with the ambitions of a few men as its motive power; but that it is a bloodless revolution, which the people have developed to utilize to restore to themselves the government which has been wrested from them by the special interests.

cern that, aside from specific issues which must perforce at times divide the progressive army, is one that has come to the fore as the dominating issue of the century—the question of how to control the all-controlling power that directs the money sources of the United States; that, still deeper, it has been learned finally that control of credits is really the thing that gives ultimate control of the nation's activities.

It is anticipated that that issue will coalesce the now divided progressive forces, when the political elements that hitherto worked together to such advantage have been again united.

Since Senator La Follette's candidacy has been formally announced, it has become apparent that his nomination by the Republicans cannot be accomplished. One finds few who will express the belief that Taft will not be re-nominated. But it is admitted that La Follette's candidacy will arouse considerable following the country over, and that he will go to the national convention with power enough to compel radical changes in the platform as it would be adopted were it not for the La Follette fight.

If, then, Woodrow Wilson be named by the Democrats, the situation will be a progressive for president on the Democratic ticket, and a candidate on the Republican ticket for whom the Republican progressives cannot fight with any heart. It is expected that it will be impossible to unite the conservative Republicans with the progressives for Taft, unless the selection of Senator Borah of Idaho should succeed in doing that.

CHOICE OF 3 ROUTES TO REACH CHICAGO

New York, N. Y., June 23.—When James J. Hill announced the large bond issue by the Great Northern there was a circumstantial statement current that he proposed to take over the Burlington and diverts it for the Northern Pacific. Since then railroad men have been speculating upon the probable results to be expected from such a proceeding. It has been repeatedly said that it was only a question of time when the Burlington would become the absolute property of the Great Northern, and although Mr. Hill, with equal frequency, discouraged the idea, he failed to kill it.

With the divorce effected as described the Chicago & Northwestern is to be operated under an alliance with the Northern Pacific. It becomes a matter of interest to know what attitude the Union Pacific will take in the routing of its traffic between Omaha and Chicago. The opinion is that it would not continue its present relation with the Northwestern, and if the arrangement is ended it is said that the Harriman road will have the choice of three connections to reach Chicago, the Rock Island, the Illinois Central and the St. Paul.

SPECIAL TRAIN FROM THE SOUTH

Bay City Chamber of Commerce Coming to the Astoria Centennial.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 23.—California is lining up for the Astoria Centennial. Commercial bodies, civic organizations and newspapers are shouting the merits of Oregon's big pageant to every home and vacation are being arranged so that the Golden State inhabitants may shut their desks and journey to Astoria via Portland during the continuance of the centennial.

his river via Southern Pacific special train. The San Francisco Commercial club which, eight months ago had but 50 members and which now shows an enrollment of 1,700 members will take an excursion to Astoria and try to win all the business men possible to their train.

It is a far cry from Los Angeles to Astoria but the news of the centennial has traveled even further south to San Diego where John Day, manager of publicity for the Astoria Centennial and the Rev. Father John F. Waters a member of the centennial executive committee go from here. While in this city Day called upon Mayor Alexander and had the mayor promise to appoint a committee to cooperate with the centennial committee in arranging the Panama-Pacific day program. The mayor, who had just finished talking with Phoenix, Arizona via long distance telephone for the first time, the line being opened but now declared that he would be in Astoria for the centennial and have several members of his cabinet with him.
