Equator "A Great Epileptic Circle," Says One Would-Be Teacher; Examiners Find Much to Relieve Tedium.

(Salem Bureau of The Journal.) Salem, Ore., June 27.—Hunger to test the minds of the examiners is found among the answers given by teachers to the questions of the first semi-annual state teachers' examination under the new law. Under the old law teachers' examinations were conducted in the separate counties and county certificates were issued. These certificates made it possible for holders to teach in that county only, but under the present system applicants for certificates take the one general examination issued by the superintendent of public instruction. The papers are corrected at the state capital by the county superintendents and the certificates issued under the holders to teach anywhere in the state.
