WHERE SCIENCE FAILS

Written for The Journal by Darra More.

COMING to individual cases like that of the Tibury girl," said said a prominent club woman and charity worker of Chicago, "the public at large will be horrified at cases which to the worker among delinquents are not unusual, so that she could care for her babies, yet he is perfectly prepared." Such is the excuse offered for the blighted life of little Ethel Tibury, just turned 18.

It all happened this way. Lillie Bell Tibury, the widow of a teamster, found herself penniless, with three youngsters on her hands, three small rooms, a few sticks of kumquat and a crushing weight of bills. Ethel was 3, Eddie a few years younger, and Gertie, the baby, was only 2. The mother sent the younger children to relatives and Ethel to visit a friend in Indiana. Then she started in to straighten out things, so that she could care for her babies.

But, before the dazed mother could get two straight breaths, the juvenile court pounced down upon her little household. The children were all haled before a scientific jury upon them. In future they would be mothered by the state. In ill health, and with her little ones, all ambition died out of the mother heart. Lillie Bell Tibury went the way of thousands of other young women who have had to face a similar problem. Drugs, drink, followed by the inevitable deadening of the moral sense, and Lillie Tibury was lost to the world.

By the court's order, Ethel was sent to the Episcopal Sisters of St. Mary.

WOMEN'S CLUB ROOM WORK OF ART

Sunshine in all its glory bursts upon the visitor fortunate enough to have entered the Cosmopolitan club as she steps within the precincts of that organization, located in the Gibson Studio building in New York city. But it is not the light from old Sol, rather from the most gorgeous and richest of apricot hangings and upholstery. The work of it is that there are well as the furnishings, were made from old things, under the guiding genius of Albert Herter.

The club was formed for women actively engaged in literary work in the metropolis, or that women similarly engaged, who came from other cities, might have a place to rest, dine and write. A number of very prominent New York society women became interested and gave many things to the club, so that now it has on its honorary list many names of the old and it is one of the swaggar institutions of the sort in the city.

Decorative Scheme.
The big living room of the club opened on an alley and was most gloomy and uninviting. The alley windows have been fitted so that the view is unobstructed and the decorative scheme gives an effect of brilliancy, not gloom. The draperies and upholstery were old velvet, given to the club, which Mr. Herter dyed and treated in a way of his own. The old furniture has been painted creamy white and ornamented with designs of fruit and flowers. The old gas fixtures are hidden by inverted shades of cone shape, suspended from the ceiling by silk cords. The shades are also designed and cut out in fruit and flowers so that the light shines through the same lovely apricot shade of silk.

The adjoining room is the general luncheon room and in here a wonderful effect has been gained in the decoration with simple blue and white Japanese towels which are used in panels on the walls and as a frieze.

Herter Great Artist.
In the private luncheon room the walls were quite beyond redemption and they have been hung with old English but the sisters did not keep her long. Then the child was sent to a round of hospitals. Next, the little outcast began to oscillate between the Juvenile Detention home and various boarding places. This eternal shuffle from place to place was kept up until January, 1908, when she was placed in the care of E. R. Colby, a probation officer. This man parceled the forlorn youngster out to a newly married couple named Winsch, whose home boasted of four rooms. The husband was 31, the wife 19. At last, thought Ethel's foster parent, we have her safely anchored. But in six weeks the child was back on the hands of the court again. The Winsches suddenly disappeared, and—little Ethel Tibury was soon to become a mother.

Neglected by the state and abused by the creatures who were paid to house and protect her, little Ethel and a 7-month-old son stand today, casting a shadow sinister upon those who took the little waif from her mother's arms. This is the sort of picture that becomes so familiar to the charity workers that, while he is not calloused, he is perfectly prepared for the things that they contend is just "bound to happen."

But there is another batched life close to Ethel's—it is that of Beulah Herter, who is just a 14-year-old girl—mother minus a marriage certificate. Here are two little girls cast upon the world like bits of thistle-down to be blown hither and thither at the will of the wind. One was neglected by her own mother; the other, by the state of Illinois. What does it all prove?

flowered chintz. This, too, has been dyed a beautiful yellow, so that the flowers are subdued and placed in the background, making a particularly beautiful effect. The remaining two rooms of the club are the writing room and the dressing room.

Albert Herter is the one man who has made prominent American creative art in weaving. An artist of note, he made a motor trip to Byrdcliffe, in the Adirondacks, one summer a few years ago and there visited the colony of artists, potters, weavers and followers of other arts, who gather there for work each summer. He became impressed with weaving and after much thought established the Herter looms with workers whom he imported from the Goshen weavers in Peru, who work only for royalty. Little by little these have been replaced by many American workers.

Mr. Herter uses only American subjects and ideas in his designs, believing that there is inspiration and material for art within the boundaries of his own country.

American Designs.
His first piece of work to come into great prominence was the wonderful frieze, a forest idyll, which he did for Mrs. E. H. Harriman when she demanded that her home be entirely the product of America. All rugs, draperies and furniture for the home are of his design. Even the paintings are the work of American artists.

The Herter looms studios are on the top floor of the Gibson Studio building just above the Cosmopolitan club, and most of the artists are young Americans, although a brilliant young Frenchman is an active assistant in the work of dyeing. Long before Mr. Herter took up the art of weaving, a tub of dye was a feature of the Herter home and constant experiments were being made on fabrics so in one respect it had not been a far cry to the actual weaving.

Some little time ago Portland was fortunate enough to have an exhibition of some Herter textile work, which was secured through the activities of the Society of Fine Arts and Crafts.

day and this unique society is doing an altruistic service, in giving the whole truth to the world.

In our sister state of Washington the law has been in effect but a short time, but according to reports much good has already resulted.

However this may be, we persist in asserting that it is only justice that the women claim—that results be made worse by women's votes and justice demands that the privilege be accorded them.

FACE DISFIGURED WITH ECZEMA

Covered with Eruption to Back of Ears So They Hardly Knew What He Looked Like. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In 4 Weeks Face Fine and Clean.

"Our little boy Gilbert was troubled with eczema when he was a few weeks old. His little face was covered with sores even to back of his ears. The poor little fellow suffered very much. The sores began as pimples, his little face was red and itched so much. We hardly knew what he looked like. The face looked like raw meat. We tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Following directions carefully and promptly we saw the result, and after four weeks, the dear child's face was as fine and clean as any little baby's face. Every one who saw Gilbert after using the Cuticura Remedies was surprised. He has a head of hair which is a pride for any boy of his age, three years. We can only recommend the Cuticura Remedies to every body." (Signed) Mrs. H. Albrecht, Box 883, West Plains, Mo., 1910.

FRA'S DIVORCED WIFE SUES FOR DIVIDENDS

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 11.—Mrs. Bertha C. Hubbard, divorced wife of Elbert Hubbard, the "Fra of Aurora," today began suit against her former husband for breach of contract.

Mrs. Hubbard alleges that the Fra entered into a contract to give her annually dividends of 12 per cent on 400 shares of Roycroft stock having a face value of $10,000, the agreement being made in June, 1903, six months before the divorce proceedings were started. She asserts that she has never received any money under this agreement, although she turned over to her husband her dower rights in their property.

The amount involved in the suit, including interest is between $18,000 and $18,000.

DREXELS ARE NOT RECONCILED BY BIRTH

London, Aug. 11.—In anticipation of the birth of Viscountess Maidstone's son, which occurred last week, Mrs. Anthony Drexel obtained a special license to spread the neighboring street with straw to deaden the noises. Grosvenor square being a short cut through Mayfair and having much traffic. Mrs.

Drexel therefore ordered a double supply of straw, through which the traffic floundered, but the police received so many complaints about the foot deep straw that they ordered it removed a day or so later.

Evidently the efforts of friends to reconcile the Drexels through the grandchild's birth have been unsuccessful. Mr. Drexel is motoring on the continent, and it is understood that his wife gave no encouragement of welcome at the London house; and although Lady Maidstone expressed a wish for her father's presence, no message was sent. It is believed now that the separation proceedings will continue. Mrs. Drexel said recently to some friends: "I am perfectly happy. Why go through it all over again?"
