the striking lightermen is complete. Parade May Be Abandoned. In view of the prospect of industrial peace it is likely that a great papade planned as a protest against the use of troops by the government will be abandoned. The war office anticipating a complete settlement of the strike before night has suspended the order for movements of further troops from Aldershot, but the soldiers are being kept entrained there, in case the negotiations between the men and their employers should take an unfavorable turn.

So great is the power of the strike leaders that the government was today compelled to ask the permission of their chief, Ben Tillett, to bring in forage duty in the city. It was granted Two Causes for Peace.

Famine and impending financial ruin for the strikers and their employers, respectively, have been the principal means of forcing peace. Of the workers thousands are literally starving. The pawnshops, their shelves glutted with pledges, are refusing further loans, the heat is intense, the hospitals are filled. and the price of ice has soared to a prohibitive figure, largely due to the difficulty of transporting it through the streets where traffic is still paralyzed. Every industry in the city is affected by the labor war and the employers are being brought to terms by the board of trade, which foresees general ruin for its members unless peace comes. Even the mint has been closed, as there are no wagons obtainable to haul its bullion.

Situation Unprecedented.

Along the water front the situation is unprecedented. Every dock is piled high with food, for which the city is suffering; the Thames is simply blocked with laden ships, and, until the employers settle, virtually not a pound is being moved or a blow struck by the workmen who have grimly resolved that if they starve, others shall share their sufferings.

Among the cargoes held up by the strike are scores of fruit shipments, one of which is a giant consignment from California which is rotting on the steamer Minnehaha.
