It is a piece of pure Carrara martie. "bought it, not only because it is an exdusitie work of art, but because of my admiration of the story of Nathan the Moust in the story of Nathan the Wise. The story, as I remember H. and I have not heard it for many years. "Saladin was the Sultan of Assyria, noted for the noblest qualities of chivality, greatness of soul, piety, justice and moderation. He caused the philosopiers of the three great religions to appear before him and when they had argued the case of the Christian, Mohammedan and Buddhist religions, Saladin was confused, and he called on Atkinson Memorial-Rev. Herbert G. Saladin was confused, and he called on Nathan the Wise to explain to him the true religion. "Nathan replied with a story of a famous emperor who had lived long before. When he was about to die the emperor called in, separately, his three beloved sons. Each of them prayed, as a parting gift, a magic ring worn by the emperor, which had the wonderful quality of making its possessor loved by his fellow men. It gave happiness, peace and prosperity. "The emperor promised the ring to each of the sons. Being troubled in Montavilla Church—A. M. Dart, pas-tor. Services: Sabbath school, 10 n. m; preaching 11 a. m; prayer meeting, Wednesday night, 7:50 Mount Tabor Church—Chapel Port-land sanitarium. A. M. Dart, pastor. Services: Sabbath school, 3 p. m. Describer of the sons. Being troubled mind, he caused his skilled jeweler make two exact duplicates. Havin confused the rings, he gave one to ea of the sons, 'admonishing each to ke make two exact duplicates. Having confused the rings, he gave one to each of the sons, admonishing each to keep it as a profound secret, disclosing to no one that he possessed the ring."

"Nathan's story concluded:

stor. "A year after the emperor died the m.; brothers assembled in annual reunion and each disclosed to the other that he had the magic ring. As good brothers should do, they then agreed that who-ever showed by his life that he was virtuous, honorable and kind to his fellow men, and was beloved, by his fellow men, he it was who had the magic ring.

"And so, Saladin,' said Nathan the Wise, you may determine between those great philosophers. Whoever shows by his life that he is virtuous; honorable and kind to his fellow man and is beloved by his fellow man, ha has a right to claim that he has the true religion'

A Song of the Marshes.

Man is the lord of the land and the moon is the queen of the sea. But the marshes have neither lord nor queen, the fair wide marshes are free. Their blossoms flaunt in the wind, which sows what the frost doth reap.

And all the marsh is astir with a life

Swallows twitter and dart, while in the sun-glad weather. Grasses and rushes and rippling reeds . dance down the wind together. Oh, the idle, sunny marshes so jubl-lant and free!

The shimmering singing marshes, that neither are land nor sea!

Sparkle of myriad fireflies, frogs that

A stir of things in the darkness, lurk-ing where shadows abide. Things that are hungry and stealthy, things that raven and hide.

The water rat gnaws at the roots and the night heron cries for his prey, Till the dawn-wind sighs in the reads, and the marsh-wren heralds the day. Sound and movement always-life is so eager and free. In the whispering stariit marshes that heither are land nor sea.

Then summer ends in the marshes, and all their singing is done: Gone is the flashing of wings, and the glancing of fireflies gone. Only the wind sighs on through the rushes, withered and sere. Earth yields harvest, and so does the sea; but none reaps harvest here
