Your Bank Account and Your Credit—Formerly the principal functions of banking was the receiving and lending of money, now the principal function of banking is dealing in credit, and the use of money is only incidental thereto. Money in all ordinary uses of trade is simply a means of transferring credits and settling balances. Credit, therefore, is the most important element in business, as it is an essential of business success. The first step toward establishing credit is the opening of a bank account. Your account is invited by the
