

AEROPANE MAY REPLACE GUNBOAT IN WAR OF NATIONS

Radical Change in Methods of Attack Predicted by Experts as Result of Development of Flying Machines.

Washington, October 3.—Aviation as an offensive and defensive force is seen to be in its infancy, but if the progress that has been made in the work for four years continues it will be but a short time when the aeroplane will overshadow the gunboat and the soldier as a means of defense and destruction in case of war, experts here believe.

When the United States government first became interested in aviation, it made rigid demands of the Wright brothers for a machine. One of the strongest requirements was that the machine stay in the air an hour. The whole world, especially France, Germany and England, thought the United States government foolish to demand that a flying machine be able to stay in the air an hour, but the Wright brothers built a machine which met the requirements of the government, and it was accepted.

Government Buys Machines.

Since the first venture, the government has purchased a number of machines. Finally all of them have proved their worth, though as yet no demand for actual demonstration of the war value of the machines has been made. The nearest approach to this was when the government dispatched three aeroplanes to San Antonio, Texas, where the federal troops were sent last spring to protect American interests in the recent Mexican revolt. A number of long flights were made in that country. On several occasions the great machine swept over the camps of the rebels, giving them a silent warning that the United States government meant business. After the troops were recalled from Texas the machines were shipped back to College Park, Md. One machine, a Wright biplane, was left at San Antonio, where the government will some day establish a permanent aviation school.

After the return of the planes to College Park, two others were purchased. This gives the army five machines. Two are in use by the navy, but these are known to the flying world as hydro-aeroplanes, made to fly from the water.

School of Aviation.

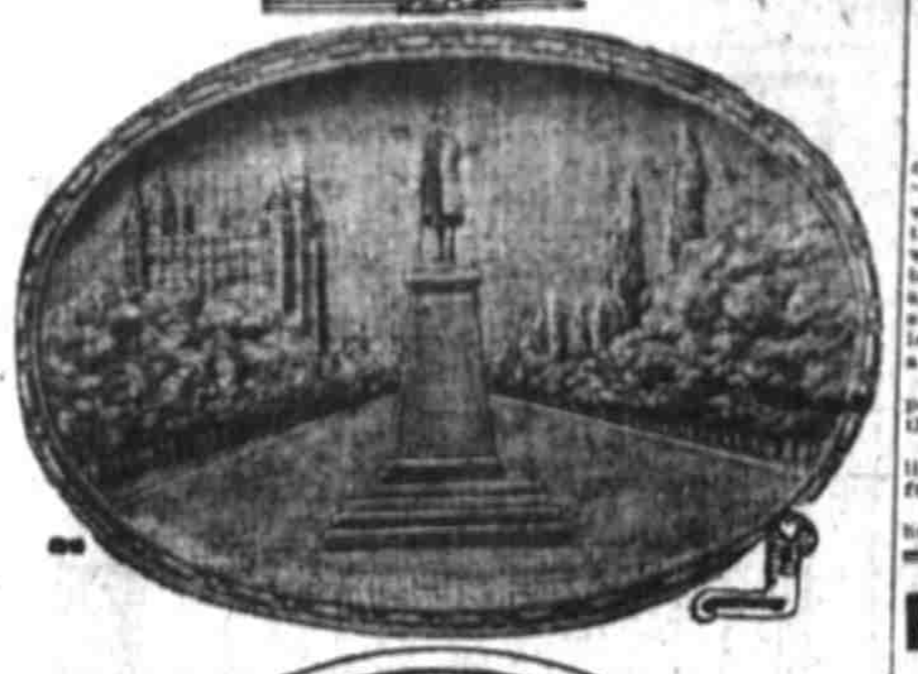

Five officers were at first detailed to the aviation school at College Park, but since then another man has been added. There are four machines there, two of the Wright type and two of the Curtiss. Since the school opened over 200 successful flights have been made by the officers, not one meeting with the slightest personal injury, though at times they have injured their machines considerably in landing. The men at first made only short flights ranging from three to 15 minutes, and going no higher than 500 feet. From time to time they increased their time in the air and have on several occasions made flights lasting an hour. They have increased their altitude until they have gone 4500 feet, this record being held by Lieutenant H. H. Arnold. From this their attention was turned to making cross-country flights, and they have flown over the city of Washington at least a dozen times. Once they made a trip to Frederick, Md., another time over to Fort Myer, Va., and on Labor day three machines flew from College Park, Md., over to Benning, D. C., where the officers were guests of the working people of Washington for the afternoon.

Making Experiments.

A number of important experiments have been made up to the government flyers. Within a short time all

Two Silver Services For Battleship Mormons and Anti-Mormons in Conflict

The gift of the Mormon Society to the Battleship Utah (above) and the design for silver service to be presented by Anti-Mormon Society.

Features of Brigham Young on Plate Stir Up Fight in State of Utah—Women Take Part.

(By the International News Service.)
New York, Oct. 3.—Mrs. Herbert Sumner Owen, of Salt Lake City, Utah, who for many months has been at the head of the anti-Mormon sentiment in Utah, which is protesting against the features of Brigham Young upon the silver service that is ready for presentation to the battleship Utah, is in this city, awaiting the homecoming of Secretary of the Navy Meyer.

In her fight against the acceptance of the service with Young's figure upon one plate of it, she has enlisted many influential members of congress and patriotic men and women. The silver service as designed, in addition to having the objectionable engraving that included the facade of the monument to the head of the Mormon church, had the beehive, the symbol of the Mormon church, upon the candelabra. The beehives were a part of the design at the base. The agitation resulted in these men engaged in the government work will have to learn telegraphy because the machines are to be fitted with wireless instruments. In case of war an officer in an aeroplane will be expected to flash messages from his machine to his army, telling of the position of the enemy's lines, the location of the roads, where the fortifications are, and all information that would be beneficial to an army in a hard campaign against a foe. An experimental wireless machine has been ordered and the officers will begin to make tests with it before many more weeks. Another important experiment will be that of throwing bombs to the enemy. The object in view is to develop an accurate machine for this work, so that in case of battle the men could do destructive work by throwing bombs into the camps of the enemy. Still another interesting experiment will be what is known to the army men as "blotch work"; that of taking a sketch of the country over which a machine is flying by the use of a pencil and a pad. This is considered important because in case of a campaign an printer with an aerial camera could fly around the scene of battle and in the course of a few minutes make a map of the surrounding country.

On the first of November the aviation school at College Park, Md., will close and the officers and enlisted men sent south where the cold weather will not bother them. Once in winter headquarters the men will settle down to hard work, and will attempt many experiments that will keep the United States in the world's limelight for its progress in the flying art.
