FISHER LOSES NERVE WHEN WATERS ROLL

Waters of Protected Bay as Smooth as Mill Pond; Lathrop in Portland.

How the Alaska syndicate planned to gain the monopoly of transportation at Controller bay through the R. S. Ryan claims and its other activities is clearly told by John E. Lathrop, Washington correspondent of The Journal, who arrived in Portland last Saturday night and is spending a few days here after visiting the scene of the Guggenheim struggle in Alaska.

The harbor is described as fully protected from heavy weather outside. The conclusions reached are thus given by Mr. Lathrop: "Controller bay is a protected harbor, landlocked, safe from all seas whipped up by winds that blow from any quarter. It has an admirable channel, about one half mile wide at the narrowest part, a mile wide for a considerable part, and several miles long. It has from 48 to 130 feet depth at mean low tide, sufficient to accommodate the heaviest draft modern big ore crushers of from 10,000 to 12,000 tons.

W. G. McPherson First to Come Forward With a Pledge to Subscribe $1000 Toward Subsidy or Capitalization—Great Trade Outlook Emphasized—Plenty of Idle Money Here for Project, He Says—Drones Scored for Inertness

Awake to the advantages that Portland of developing Alaskan trade through a direct line to the northern ports, W. G. McPherson, president of the W. G. McPherson company, has come forward as one of the men willing to join with The Journal in a subscription list, either to make up a subsidy or to capitalize a Portland-Alaska line.

Assurances have been received by The Journal from several public spirited citizens of their willingness to contribute as soon as the movement is brought a little more to focus. W. M. Killingsworth is one of these, being confident that large benefits will flow from such an investment, not only to the city at large but in dividends.

The Journal's offer was to start the list as one of 100 to subscribe the $1000 a subsidy or $5000 in subscription to the capital stock of an Alaskan line. Mr. McPherson's letter is as follows: "Portland, Oct. 9.—To the Editor of The Journal—Your offer to subsidize, or $5000 for investment in a steamship line to Alaska for the furtherance of trade relations between here and Portland, providing 100 other citizens of this city will contribute each like amount, was brought vividly again to my attention by your cartoon in Saturday's issue of The Journal, which cartoon to the minds of many Portland people truthfully depicts the attitude of Portland capitalists toward any enterprise which is undoubtedly for the benefit and advancement of the city and its merchants but which does not hold out immediate and certain returns at large rates with all risk eliminated.

At that time as now we were brought by merchants and miners from Alaska to put a line of ships, or one ship, or anything in the way of an ocean carrier between here and "Nome City" to the end that the Alaskans might be given an opportunity to trade with us and get some relief from the robbery and holdup methods of the Seattle merchants and ship owners, of which they complained most bitterly, at the same time lamenting our inertness and indifference to the splendid chance we had for capturing their dollars and good will. The Oregonian at that time gave my letter all the prominence that could be hoped for and if my memory serves aright, the added benefit of an editorial commending the scheme, but
