Universal Mania,

The world has dreary grown and sad.
The friends that once I loved I find
Unworthy, selfish. I may add.
They're slightly 'dippy' as to mind!
There's John, my intimate of years;
I have to dodge him every day.
Or he will read me—hence these tears— Some portions of his "latest play."

Rebecca, loveliest of her sex.

If toward her I but chance to look, If toward her I but change will vex My even temper straight will vex My even temper straight will vex By quoting chapters from her "boo Friend William wants to read to me The bulky manuscript he's writ, And pretty Susan, even sho, Would try on me her "clever skit."

Successful authors? No, not yet;
They ne'er will be, if I may judge.
No publisher will they e'er get
To take such tommyrot and fudge!
They don't know beans, these friends of of real art they take no note; Of real art they take to a line
Of the immortal work I wrote!

To save the forests and the coal, we meet betimes in Kansas City, and spring a good long rigmarole, and sing a soulinspiring ditty. We talk at dinner and at lunch, on how to save the country's bacon, and then we go, the whole blamed bunch, to have a fine group pictule taken. Long may our golden banner wave, Long may we wage this noble battle! The land's resources we shall save, if we must pow-pow at Scattle! We'll scourge the pillagers away, and drive the Morganhelmers batty, e'en though to win the fateful fray we have to meet at Cincinnatty! The talkfest is the shining sword with which we'll stop the spoilers' capers! So let's orate and prosy papers; on all who don't agree with us we'll pass our caustic, savage strictures, and after all the pleasant fuss we'll go and sit for moving pictures. We sattle for eternal right, for home—be it a hall or shanty— Our idea of a novel and thrilling race and we shall win the macred fight
