With the adoption of the graduate manager system at the University of While in the east Judge McCredie Oregon, all of the conference colleges inquired after the players Portland of the northwest and Stanford and players of the team, giving each drafted from the Tri-State league, and Berkeley as well, have the same form he says that Peters and Street are tout- of supervision of student body affairs. In each college or university one man always an alumnus, is intrusted with the handling of the teams, the hiring of coaches, the buying of supplies, the arranging of schedules, and the management of all games, concerts, dances, and debates in which his college is financially concerned. Nominally, at least, the graduate manager is under the control of an athletic council or board of control composed usually of a mixture of student and faculty members. These boards have the choosing of the graduate manager, the auditing of his ac-counts, and in some instances the stipulation of the salary which the man-ager is to receive. In all the colleges these boards have veto power over the actions of the graduate managers and on things important are generally approached before action is taken by the graduate manager.

The advantages of the graduate man-Year, Clubs, Attendance, Receipts. Crack High School Eleven Will ager system are many. It does away with the irresponsibility of student mangement and when rightly worked out prevents the chaos and disorder that each new student manager must when he takes up his duties as manager of some one of the enterprises in which the student body participates. Under the student manager system, each manager thinks solely of his own particular branch of athletics and cares only about the season that he is man-Thus, the different enterprises are made to suffer on account of lack of cooperation between the managers, each of whom is trying to make a rec-ord. Then, too, the apparatus and property of the students is not well taken care of from year to year, and a heavy financial loss is experienced from a continual change of managers.

When it is realized that $3000 is spent on the coaching of the football teams at most of these colleges during October and November, that nearly $1000 is devices. The largest financial returns spent on the equipment of the football to a college from efficient management squad each fall, and that another $1000 is in the handling of the big games and goes for first class beefsteaks to put meets. Kellogg, who played right and for the varsity last year, is again back in the same position, and Ingram, a former class team man, is now being used at left guard.

Whether or not all of these changes are permanent is net a matter of confecture, but the fact that they checked the triumphant march of the second are, at least, working well for the pres

Dolan Is Mum

Dolan refuses to make any comments on the situation but it is the general opinion on the campus that the coach is about ready to select a varsity eleven. Robinson has been playing a splendid seems to have a broader knowledge of football than the average high school player. McKenzie is inexperienced but is developing rapidly, as is evidenced by the fact that he has replaced Carlson at center.

Shaw has been a promising man from the beginning but has suffered from an injured knee most of the season, having only recently been released from the hospital corps. He is husky and speedy and should make a good running mate for Dwarte, the native of Guam, who arrival at the Oregon Agricultural college impressed Coach Dolan as being the man for a place on the varsity.

Wing Positions Uncertain. The end positions still appear to be the most uncertain of all. Enberg and McFarland a junior: Darling of Wash-ington high, Cockran of Lincoln high, and Larson, who played fullback for the freshmen last year, are all strong con-tenders. Enberg. who has alreadserved three years on the varsity, is taking care of the left end of the line creditably and will doubtless be able to do so throughout the season.

Kellogg appears to be the most likely Kellogg appears to be the most likely candidate for the other end. He was a valuable man there last year but so far this season has not been displaying his usual form. However, much improvement has been noted in his playing during the past few days, which has greatly pleased the coaching staff. Wallogg is atrong on both offensive and Kellogg is strong on both offensive and defensive play and also understands how to handle the forward pass. Walters probably ranks next to Kel-logg, and as he has had only two weeks practice, may yet be given a place. He is light but speedy and the red haired chap has plenty of fighting determina-
