COPLEY ASSETS HE HEARD JOGULAR TALK OF JACKPOT

Congressman Gives "Inside History" of Political Mixup That Resulted in Election of Lorimer to the Senate.

Chicago, Oct. 30.—(Greatly) glorifying the "inside history" of the political mixup resulting in the election of William Lorimer, the "bona fide" of Chicago, to the United States senate, Congressman Ira Clifford Copley, Republican representative from Illinois, held the limelight here today in the senatorial investigation of the charges that Lorimer was elected through bribery.

Congressman Copley declared that in 1892 he first suggested that Lorimer could be elected a United States senator through a judicious combination of Democratic and Republican interests. He testified that at that time he was in favor of anyone who would defeat Hopkins, whom he considered "waffly" for the senatorship.

Continuing, Copley said that he had heard "jogular talk" about the famous St. Louis jackpot alleged to have been collected by Edward H. Hines, the lumber magnate, but that he had no knowledge of such a jackpot.

This is the machine, though the drawing does not do it justice. This is a hornless talking machine of the very latest model—compact and complete. The sound waves gathered by the reproduced are sent through the tone-arm to the tone chamber, in the base of the cabinet and magnified by the construction of the tone-arm and tone-chamber, so that the music is exactly the same as that from which the original records were made, without "cramping" or distortion.
