Chief Meyers of the Giants being put out at third base in the fourth game of the world's championship series held in Philadelphia. The photograph shows how awkwardly Baker covers third base. It is the identical play in which Snodgrass spiked Baker in the last game. Meyers was on second with one out in the fifth. The Gianiz were a run behind at the time. One of Bender's curves eluded Thomas and on the short passed hall Meyers tried for third. Thomas recovered the ball in time to toss to Baker, who tagged the Indian catcher. The ponderous Meyers used the Fallaway slide, but it was brought into execution when too far from the bag. Meyers explained that the reason he resorted to the "hook" slide was to avoid spiking Baker, who is seen guarding third base, as he did when Snodgrass spiked him. The Chief said that the base runner is entitled to the right of way and that Snodgrass used his condemned slide, straight for the bag, because he saw that it was the only way he might make it safely.

A buseball. "Our intention all along has been to, make the Northwestern league club a Nick feeding place for the Beavers. Williams will have one of the best clubs of young ball players in the country. There will be no dead or decaying timber to work with. We want youngsters on that club who are anxious to rise in their profession. There is no use to experiment with the fellows who have played half a dozen years in some class of baseball. Young fellows like Coltrin, Moore and Lamline are what we want. Of course they lack experience but they are mighty promising. If we can get three or four young ball players out of the Northwestern league who are ready to go to a faster league, we shall feel that we are amply repaid even though the turn-stiles do not show that we have made any money.

"Walter will have a lot of players on his hands when he goes to Santa Maria next spring and the most promising of those unable to make Beavers will be shipped to Nick Williams, who, by the way, may also train in California, somewhere in the northern part of the state. It is no more expensive to train in California than in Portland and besides there is the advantage of plenty of practice games with the various clubs and the independent teams that are to be found in our neighboring state."

RETURN FROM SOUTH

Nearly all of the Portland ball players who intend to winter around Portland, arrived home from the south this morning. Koestner, Rodgers, Rapps, Peckinpaugh and Ryan came in. Barry will follow in a day or so, Seaton will pitch at Oxnard, Cal., this winter. Lefty Ables came along with the Beavers to join the big hunt. The baseball colony was also augmented by the arrival last night of Harry Steinfeldt, the former Chicago National star, who will visit here several days.
