

FIVE DECISIONS, EACH A REVERSAL

Two Local Option Convictions and Manslaughter Verdict From Union Lost.

(Salem Bureau of the Journal.)
Salem, Or., Nov. 21.—Owing to the meeting of the State Bar association in Portland today, the supreme court handed down its regular week's list of opinions yesterday afternoon. Five decisions were rendered, each being a reversal.

The failure of the indictments to state that an election had been held in Union county for the purpose of establishing the legality or illegality of the liquor traffic caused the overthrow of two convictions on charges of violation of the local option law. The initiative law in Oregon on this subject is modeled after the Texas statute. The local option case of the state vs. Dell Kennedy was reversed, and the lower court directed to sustain the demurrer on these grounds. The same ruling was made in the similar case of the state vs. Victor Townsend, also from Union county.

Jesse Parker, who was convicted of the crime of manslaughter in the circuit court of Union county, will be given a new trial as a result of reversal of the lower court by Justice McBride. Parker was tried on a charge of murder in the first degree, but was convicted of manslaughter. The main reason for reversing this case was an erroneous instruction to the jury regarding previous threats made by the defendant against the deceased.

F. C. Whitton and J. C. Bryant, respondents, vs. M. C. Griswold, appellant, appealed from Judge Morrow's court of Multnomah county, was reversed and remanded. This was a suit for $10,507.48 commission for the purchase of timber lands.

E. L. Krutall, respondent, vs. J. W. Jackson, appellant, appeal from Washington county on petition for rehearing, was denied.

The George Palmer Lumber company vs. Wallowa county, appeal from Wallowa county, was reversed. The question involved was the sufficiency of the description of a proposed road to confer jurisdiction on the county court.

New Pantages Stormed by Patrons; The Band Master Orpheum Headliner

Owner Showered With Congratulations; Fine Floral Gifts Feature.

Two crowded houses witnessed the opening of Pantages new vaudeville theater at Seventh and Alder streets, last night, and showered praise on the owner both for the fine new house and the excellent program. The orchestra pit and stage were banked with beautiful flowers which had been presented to Mr. Pantages in honor of the occasion.

Long before the doors were thrown open at 7 o'clock and again at 9 o'clock the sidewalk and entrance were crowded with people. Within a few moments of each opening every seat was taken. The feature of the first performance was a solo by Mrs. Alexander Pantages, wife of the owner of the circuit. Mrs. Pantages was formerly a footlight star. Her selections were received with applause. Bouquets of flowers were showered on her from the boxes and front of the theatre and baskets of beautiful blooms presented to her.

In addition to the personal congratulations showered on him last night Mr. Pantages received 16 telegrams from all parts of the United States and Canada and one from their representative in Berlin.

As an opening number the orchestra, numbering seven pieces, played a new march, "Alexander," written and dedicated to the honor of Alexander Pantages, by S. W. Rosebrook. The address of dedication was made by George L. Hutchins, manager of the Portland Regatta festival, who complimented Mr. Pantages highly, calling him the "king of amusement purveyors."

In the boxes were Mayor Rushlight, Senator Selling and many other of the most prominent citizens of the city, the guests of Mr. Pantages.

The new theatre is one of the most handsomely appointed in Portland and every part of it follows the most modern and up to date lines. It is absolutely fireproof and the many exits provided make it exceedingly safe. The acoustics were found to be as good as could be desired, and anything above a whisper on the stage can be heard in all parts of the house. Notwithstanding the crowded condition of the house the air was as pure as the end of the second performance as at the beginning of the evening. The house was very comfortable throughout and the temperature remained practically stationary. Dainty souvenir silk programs were presented to the patrons.

Johnny, Emma Ray, Paying First and Last Visit Here in Vaudeville.

The Orpheum is offering as its headliner this week Johnny and Emma Ray who are paying their first and last visit to Portland in vaudeville with "The Bandmaster." The skit deals with one Mrs. Baldwin Piker, whose newly acquired riches and efforts to be one of the elite cause all of the comedy. She is to give a musical soiree and Mike Donovan, leader of the full-blooded Hungarian band, which is to play for the dance, is mistaken for the German violin virtuoso who is to appear. There is something of some sort doing from start to finish when the minor members of the company are drawn in a vacuum cleaner. Mrs. Ray is, to say the least, buxom with a voice to match. Mr. Ray is the little fat monkey type of Irishman with a laugh that is a mainstay. John Gray, as the butler, was the general foil for everybody. The act goes with plenty of laugh and a telling feature is the violin stunt.

If applause is the standard, Mr. and Mrs. Jack McGreevy just about captured the palm. Mr. Jack as the village fiddler and Mrs. Jack as the fat country maid are a good pair of characters who won out without a struggle. Their dish of village gossip was delectable and their grand finale of playing and dancing was pure fire with the audience demanding more.

Langton-Lucier, assisted by Jesse White, are back again in their little-of-everything-act which is not materially changed from the last time. Messenger boy antics and eccentric dancing are the mainstays of their hilarity. Les Fraed-Nad is a French ventriloquist act with a slightly different slant. Yodeling is one of the strong cards as is a dummy which walks and smokes.

A dog act is always attractive and the one presented by Mile. Pallieres and her family of little black and tan pets is no exception. The act comes down on a number of little fellows in a whirling flying machine.

The bill is given a good start by the Seebacks in a bag punching act with elaborate settings. Harry Seeback evidently deserves his title of the world champion for he does remarkable things with the bags. His partner is an attractive little person who does stunts herself.

Knute Erickson appears as a character comedian and offers a number of Swedish dialect things minus the Swedish. He rather redeems himself with his "crazysms" and picture song which is out of the beaten track.

standers not being quick enough to suit him, he sent a shot in his direction, which struck and splintered a chair within a foot of the man shot at. He quickly rifled the cash drawer, securing between $40 and $50, and backing from the room ran south. In crossing a ditch he was seen to fall, but quickly regaining his feet he disappeared in the darkness. At the place where he fell was found his mask, which was a woman's stocking. The robber is described as being about 5 feet 7 inches tall, weight about 160. He wore a black slouch hat and light clothes and overcoat. A stranger answering this description was seen about the town during the day.

Trading in Wallowa Land.

(Special to the Journal.)
Enterprise, Or., Nov. 21.—The county records show an unusual number of real estate transfers this fall in Wallowa county. While the trades are among local people generally it shows that the money stringency cuts no figure. Many of the improved land sales are near the $100 per acre mark. Sam Pace, the veteran real estate dealer, says that from the inquiries he is getting from outside prospective buyers he looks for rapid development of the county.

Sunday Wedding at Clatskanie.

(Special to the Journal.)
Clatskanie, Or., Nov. 21.—At the "Mountain Home" of the bride's parents in this city, Clayton E. Walkey and Miss Elinor K. Larson were married Sunday by Rev. Gordon R. Houston of the First Presbyterian church. Mr. Walkey is manager of the mills and camps of the West Oregon Lumber company and Mrs. Walkey is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nels Larson. Mr. Larson was connected with the A. & C.

R. R. from the time of its building and now holds a responsible position with the S. P. & S. Mr. and Mrs. Walkey left on the evening train for Portland, after which they will make their home in this city.

PLAY ABOUNDS IN HUMAN INTEREST

"Mother," Goodman's Piece, Touches Heart Strings of Heilig Audience.

By J. F. S.
Jules Eckert Goodman's play, "Mother," which Portland people have taken especial interest in since its first production in New York, had its delayed Portland opening at the Heilig last night and delighted the unusually intelligent audience which had gathered to see the work of this former Portland writer. It is the first of Mr. Goodman's plays to be publicly acted here and it reveals him as a master of character and an unusually successful pursuer of the elusive and much-sought-after quality known as human interest.

"Mother" is a four act composition played upon the heart strings. "Wasn't it awful!" exclaimed one man as he came out of the theatre. "I'm going to write my mother a 10-page letter first thing in the morning."

Mother's Self Sacrifice.
"Mother" is tragic, but so is motherhood, and this play of Mr. Goodman's brings home poignantly that fact. It is the story of a mother's self-sacrifice for her children, of her efforts to keep her family name clear, to get the right kind of husbands for her girls and keep her boys from getting the wrong kinds of wives. It's the old story that most mothers go through in greater or less degree, but it is a subject that people, particularly men, don't usually talk about. Killing voices the Anglo-Saxon prejudice against an appeal to one's mother in one of his earlier stories. He crystallized the idea in that latest verse of his, "The Female of the Species." But Mr. Goodman doesn't share his prejudice. He, rather, agrees with Hall Caine and his "The Mother of the Man."

But don't think that "Mother" is all tragedy. It is far from that. Mother is a cheerful body and though she has her trials she also has her joys. And she is a successful mother because, in the end, her battles are won and she makes good the "notes" she has given the world.

One or two are held up for payment for a while but none is dishonored.

Katie Putnam Is Star.
She tackles her problems with a light heart and leaves the crying to the rest of the family—who do very well indeed at it. In fact some of them weep so much one wonders if they are worth the trouble. But she doesn't mind she ups and saves 'em. How she does it is worth seeing.

With the exception of two or three persons, the company that Mr. Brady has sent out to give "Mother" is not as good as the play. Katie Putnam, who plays "Mother," is one of these exceptions. She is very good. Margot Merriam, as the elder sister, is fair, and Frederick Burt and George Leary are good, though Burt overdoes the third act a little. Jewel Fowler doesn't make a sweet and girlish person out of the young sister. Paul Kelly and Bert Perret are the usual pair of alarmingly clever juveniles. Such youngsters remind one of the question, "Why are children so bright and grown ups so stupid?"

Once again musical comedy lovers can take their regular "dose" each week for the Lyric theatre was opened last night in its new home, Fourth and Stark streets.—That people are partial to musical comedies and also think highly of the Lyric company, was evidenced by the crowd which gathered long before the doors were opened and stood "patiently" waiting. In fact, their patience was so great that when the doors were finally thrown open and the crowd started in they took an iron support with the play. The reward for those who stood thus appeared to satisfy the crowd and applause was frequent. "The Jolly Widow," playing there, is a jolly play. It is comic from the start and has some very catchy songs which caught the fancy of the audience. A chorus of 13 pretty girls adds to the attractiveness of the company.

BEAVERTON THUG USES STOCKING AS A MASK

(Special to the Journal.)
Hillsboro, Or., Nov. 21.—Sheriff Hancock was not notified until late Saturday night of the hold up of the Beaverton Bar saloon and spent the night and Sunday running down clues, but without success. The hold up entered the place about 6:30 o'clock when Barkeeper Ashcroft was in charge and there were but two customers in the room. He leveled a gun at the barkeeper and commanded "hands up," and one of the by-

How to Always Have Soft, Lustrous Hair

"If every woman but knew how easy it is to have a wealth of soft, silken hair—all her own—there would be no further use for wigs, hair pieces, Mae Martyn, writing in the New York Express. "It is only a matter of right shampooing," she continues, "which means avoiding head washes of a harmful nature."

"With ordinary ointment one can enjoy the delights of a cleansing, soothing and very beneficial shampoo. Just dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water and your shampoo is ready. This rubbed on the head loosens all dirt and dandruff, energizes the tissues and follicles and promotes a healthy condition of the scalp. After rinsing, the hair dries quickly, evenly and takes on a charming softness and lustre that adds greatly to womanly beauty."
