Calling Customs

Women's Rule of Making Formal calls Once a Year on All Acquaintances Should Stand.

FORMAL calls should be made once a year on all our circle of visiting acquaintances. We should also call after any entertainment to which we have been invited.

We must not allow the mere fact of living near together to serve as an excuse for endeavoring to make the acquaintance of persons who move in a social world different from our own.

A first call should be returned promptly, within a week, if possible. It must also correspond in form with the original visit.

Something must depend on the habits and ways of life of our friends. In a manufacturing town or village where the hour for supper is 5 o'clock, calls should not be made after that time.

A. L. FISH, Care The Journal.

TO A STENOGRAPHER--By Darra More

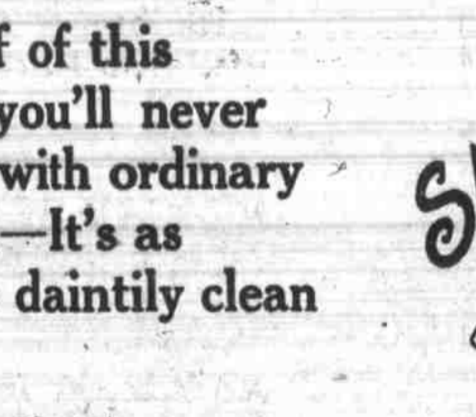

Written for The Journal. I'd show you a part of her letter. "I'm a plain, homely, wrinkled old woman. I'm not cultured nor have I what they call style."

Doesn't it make the heart of you came up in your throat and stick there to read that woman's words? Doesn't it make every muscle in your body ache?
