When I started on that romance I had a lot of clothes, bedding and a few pieces of furniture and the first year we lived on $350 for the year. It took close economy, but we thought it fun. Finances no better another year and clothes thinner and the fun grew less. It has been the same for 13 years and I am so heartily weary of saving and pinching and going without that I con-sider all wasted years. Had I worked for myself those years I would now have some money laid up, and could dress like other women one meets. Hood. T is possible to pay too high a price for the good things of life, no mat-ter how much satisfaction they may bring us. This is especially true in the cause of purely material delights. The temporary pleasure we derive from them cannot compensate for the lifs that they may bring if the joys they afford us are experienced at the cost of physical health or spiritual strength. Only the other day another master Only the other day another master mind of the financial world was removed from this sphere of activity, and the unanimous verdict of the press was that he had "worked himself to death."

Like Harriman, he had undertaken responsibilities that were beyond the limit of any one man's strength, and as the natural result nature had rebelled.

Of course, looking at such a life from the strictly material point of view, the feats that this man performed were phenomenal, and he will probably long be rated as one of the world's success ful men. It is an open question wheth-er this success was as genuine as it actually appears, however. We are put into this world to live our life not for the mere purpose of accumulating a storage vault full of stocks and bonds.

A more dollar-and-cent victory is a pretty poor result to exhibit as the product of a lifetime of labor and ex-perience. And if, in addition to this, the money has been made by the sac-rifice of all that is highest and noblest within ourselves we have still less of which we can justly feel proud. Life is too high a price to pay for any temporal success. Work that must shorten our days is not profitable work, no matter how big the pay may be. So long as we know that there is a limit to human endurance-that there is a bound beyond which mental and physical strength cannot, go without danger-it is our first duty to keep well within these limitations. And if there is one fact in life of which we are certain it is that physical health demands a reasonable adjust-ment of each 24 hours that they may include a proper amount of sleep and recreation as well as work. It is right that we should aspire to succeed. It is right that we should try to make money. It is right that we should be eager to perform worthy tasks and that we should aspire to bear great responsibilities; but to do all this we cannot afford to neglect the other side of our nature, and when the demands of work become so great that they must shorten the hours of sleep and interfere with the time that we should otherwise spend in developing the mental and spiritual sides of life, work becomes a menace and no financial reward can compensate for the price we may be called upon to pay for the privilege of violating these natural laws.

There must not only be love, but there must be love that is founded on comradeship. To have comradeship we must have community of interest. There is a great chasm between passionate love that springs into flame after a few meetings and the love that has its foundation in real liking.

Known All Over The World -Known Only For The Good It Has Done.

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the uffering of women, or received so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In nearly every community you will find women who have been restored to nealth by this famous medicine. Almost every woman you meet knows of the great good it has been doing among suffering women for the past 30 years.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, many of whom state that it has saved them from surgical operations.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from roots and herbs, and is perfectly harmless.

The reason why it is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the female organism, restoring it to healthy and normal activity.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills pecu- (0) liar to their sex y should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydie E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

A word about the little girl of 17, who "has never been any where, seen anything, wasn't a bit worldly." Such a girl is too young to assume the re-

355 sponsibilities of marriage. She knows too little to rush without preparation into matrimony. She wasn't old enough to become a mother. She wasn't old enough to be tled down to "housework, sew, mend clothes, look after babies."

Little girls who have been shut up on hay ranches need lots of recreation, fun, when they come in town. Little ton street girls of 17 were never meant to take up the heavy tasks that wifehood and motherhood attaches. They must be treated like little bables themselves. And the man who marries them should take all the needs of youth into consideration. Such girls are nearly always inconsistent. That's why they should marry men who understand inconsistency and know how to treat with it.

I don't believe in "blasted hopes or dead loves or broken hearts." I'm like the man who saw the camel for the first time-"There ain't no such thing." Of course when the divorce taste is still bitter in one's mouth, one is apt to scoff. One is liable to see things through spectacles that deform and discolor the whole face of nature.

But, listen! You are young; you are capable; you have your faculties, every one of them. And you have two beautiful ohildren, a boy and a girl. Children are God's most precious gifts. They are something to ray your life with sunshine. They have been given you to make them all that you would yourself; they are given into your keeping, that you may put into their lives all that you think you have nissed. There's your cure; there's your happiness. How dare you talk of plasted hopes, of dead loves with a world before you, a future before you, and yours that may be woven as you see fit?

Stop thinking about your "miserable" ast. It is so utterly foolish and futile. Take that baby boy to your heart, provide for your baby girl, and be charitable toward that wife whom you think inconsistent. Remember, my friend, she was only 17 when she married. She is only 22 now. Just a child, and you say, an ignorant child. She was yours once. She was yours first. You became responsible for her the day you took here to the altar. You will always be responsible for her. No divorce and no conduct of hers can alter that fact. You are a man; she is a girl. She is the mother of your chil-The more inconsistent, the dren. more ignorant she may be, the greater is your responsibility.

Be kind to her; see that she is ways provided forge watch over her; always have a helping hand ready for her when her road gets rough. That's the man's way. For very young girls make, oh, so many mistakes. They are silly and unreasonable sometimes. But they need protection always. A man owes a debt to any woman who has brought him two beautiful children. It should bring him happiness to pay that
