

42 CANDIDATES IN LEGISLATIVE RACE FROM MULTNOMAH

There Are But 18 Jobs to Be Filled by Voters — Good Roads is Most Popular Slogan Among Office Seekers.

Forty-two candidates are now swarming around the 18 legislative jobs to be filled by the voters of Multnomah county. There are 11 Republicans and three Democrats announced for the state senate, 23 Republicans and three Democrats for representative, and two Republicans for joint representative with Clackamas county.

A survey of the platform of the candidates shows that good roads is the most frequent slogan. While many of the candidates declare for simplified court procedure, for reform in the school laws, for exemption of household goods from taxation, for better regulation of corporations, for regulation of bridge traffic and for an interstate bridge over the Columbia river. The three candidates endorsed by the Workingmen's Political club favor free text books.

Good Roads Slogan.
Declaration for good roads legislation is made by Gus C. Moore, Dan Kellaher, C. W. Hodson, W. A. Storey, George M. Hyland and George W. Caldwell, Republican candidates for the senate, and by A. L. Dundas, A. L. Sullivan, W. Irving Spencer, M. J. Murnane, Harold A. Wilkins, Arthur W. Lawrence, H. C. King, R. O. Rector, Jay H. Upton and J. H. Nolte, Republican candidates for representative.

Exemption of household goods from taxation to a "limited" or "reasonable" amount is favored by Moses Caldwell and M. J. Clohesy, candidates for the senate, and by John R. Latourette, Conrad P. Olson and Arthur I. Moulton, candidates for representative. A flat declaration for exemption of such goods without restriction is made by Robert S. Farrell and Boon Cason, candidates for the senate, and by Upton and Dundas, candidates for the house. T. L. Perkins, for the senate, favors exemption to $500, and the same is true of W. Irving Spencer, for the senate, and Storey, Dundas, Upton, Rector, Lawrence and Murnane, for the house.

New School Laws.
"New school laws," or "reform" in school laws forms part of the platform of Kellaher, for the senate, and Spencer, Dundas, Upton, Rector, Lawrence and Murnane, for the house.

Reform in court procedure is particularly advocated by Latourette, Moulton, Henry McConnell and Claude B. Hicks, for representative, while Dundas favors "revision of the criminal laws."

Better regulation of corporations is favored by Caldwell and Cason, for the senate, and by Olson and Moulton, candidates for the lower house.

Regulation of bridge traffic by the state in some manner is proposed by Storey and Cason, for the senate, and by Wilkins, Moulton, R. B. Lucas and L. G. Carpenter, who seek seats in the lower house.

An interstate bridge at Vancouver is favored by Kellaher, Moore and Charles W. Hodson, for the senate, and by J. H. Nolte and Dundas, candidates for representative.

Woman Suffrage Indorsed.
Rector, Murnane and Lawrence, the trio indorsed by the labor organization, all declare for free text books, "tax reform," and voice opposition to the fee system. Cason also declares for free text books.

Woman suffrage is indorsed by Kellaher and Upton. Perkins favors special grand juries and regulation of the sale of firearms. Kellaher declares for a "live public service commission to protect the people against corporation abuses," and Moulton for a "perfected public service commission." Lucas wants civil service for state employees, and George Bossman, candidate for representative, wants to "eliminate the criminal class by treating crime as hereditary."

C. N. McArthur, speaker at the session of 1909, who is seeking another term as representative, makes a business session the keynote of his appeal.

All the candidates except one declare they will be bound by Statement No. 1, and most of them generally indorse the Oregon system. The exception is Clohesy. Many of the aspirants particularly pledge themselves to strict economy and business principles.

M. J. Clohesy is in a class by himself. He is opposed to the initiative, referendum and recall. He also declares opposition to single tax or the bonding of the state for $20,000,000 "for any other sum for wagon roads."

E. B. Covert, candidate for the senate, contents himself with a declaration that he is opposed to extravagant and freak legislation. J. J. Fitzsimmons, candidate for representative, makes the broad declaration that he is for "the masses," and "for the people, first, last and always."

A. M. Brunswick, candidate for representative, is for just laws, freedom from boss rule, and Edwin G. Amme, only man in the list a candidate for renomination as representative, says he is for "economical and sensible legislation."

The six Democratic candidates for legislative jobs have each adopted brief platforms, pledging themselves to maintain the Oregon progressive laws and to favor a business administration of affairs. They are J. Woods Smith, John C. Welch and W. L. Page, for the senate; Martin Kronenberg, J. G. Nichols and Jack M. Yates, for representative.

Mascot Pig Hailed as Real Champion

"Little Nemo," noted as squealer of first water. B. A. Brisette, who trained pet.

With Little Nemo, his trained pet pig, B. A. Brisette, of Cottonwood, Idaho, furnished luck and diversion aplenty for the big Inland Empire excursion party that came down to the stock show. Little Nemo was one of the best little squealers that ever visited this city. He squealed whether he was right or wrong and squealed all the time, but he brought the excursionists the best of luck. As a mascot he has been hailed by his proud owner as grand reserve champion pig of all time.

GATHERING EVIDENCE AGAINST AGITATORS WILL NOT SEEK TO HAVE TAXES REFUNDED

After being assured by Acting Mayor George L. Baker that the police department is gathering evidence against street agitators and doing all in its power to get rid of the crowds that recently assisted in the disturbance that broke up the Baden-Powell meeting, members of a committee of the Ad club expressed regret that the club had at its luncheon yesterday, adopted a resolution insinuating that the city administration is not doing its duty.

"If we had known what is being done," said Frank McCrillie, "we would not have adopted that resolution. I didn't vote for it anyway. My reason for not doing so was that I believed it would be giving too much consideration to idle reports. The publicity given to these men only inflates their heads and causes more trouble. I take the stand that a civic organization is simply adding fuel to the flames by recognizing the disturbers in resolutions. The way to deal with them is to single out violators and prosecute them to the limit allowed by law."

Acting Mayor Baker told the ad men that Mayor Rushlight, before he left for California Sunday had ordered 10 plain clothes men of the police department assigned to the task of gathering evidence against the street agitators.

His Excuse Sufficient.

EXCURSIONISTS SEE SELVES IN MOTION

"Oregon First" Party Witnesses Fine Exhibition of Moving Pictures.

That for which Bobby Burns sang: "O wad some gift the giffle gie us To see ourselves as others see us—"

Was granted in a way never dreamed of by Burns when, through the magic of moving pictures, shown between courses at the dinner in the Commercial club last night, "Oregon First" invaders of California saw themselves as they had been seen by the people of San Francisco.

Some of the pictures had been posed, and these were stiff and conventional—but a number of them had been taken when the subjects knew nothing of the operator's presence, and these evoked laughs, from those who had stayed at home, at the expense of the two-state junketers.

The notable ceremonies attendant upon Oregon's leadership of states and national in first choice of site for state building at the 1915 exposition were reproduced as though bodily transported to Portland.

President C. C. Moore of the exposition company could almost be heard predicting the greatness of the exposition, and his kindly conclusion, "Oregon shall be first in our hearts and first as partner in this great enterprise—and this is Oregon soil."

Caught in Act.
Governor West was caught in the act of accepting the "deed" to the new territorial acquisition of Oregon in San Francisco.

All but the music and the words were reproduced in Mrs. Rose Bloch-Bauer's singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" on the temporary stage at the state building site, and it was what might have been called irresistible impulse that lifted diners to their feet when the orchestra caught the music and set them singing:

"Then conquer we must, For our cause it is just, And this be our motto, 'In God is our trust.'"

Governor Oddie, with the good humored grimace and quick smile that signified his acceptance of the place next to Oregon for Nebraska when he had come hoping to equally divide honors, was seen accepting the "deed" to Nebraska's soil at the fair, and just then Mrs. West and the governor of Oregon came back to the platform bearing the Oregon banner, which they had lifted by the side of the Oregon fir that bore the flag of Oregon first.

Lieutenant Governor Wallace of California and other speakers at the ceremonial passed one after the other. The full dress military review was recommended by General Wisner. One company after another wheeled and counter-marched and the great band with its impressive drum major marched into and out of the picture.

Diners Laugh Heartily.
J. Fred Larson was splintered last night and there was a merry laugh from the diners when his appearance in the pictures showed him in the same demonstrative position that he used in explaining the views. George M. Hyland, as chairman of the committee on arrangements, was almost omnipresent. Julius L. Meigs and other members of the Oregon exposition commission were seen participating in the ceremonial. The ride on the bay, where the gulls were persistently winging before the camera, where were seen Alcatraz, Goat and Angel islands, and where the Oregonians pointed at the site of the Oregon building until certain the camera was no longer catching them, was succeeded by the faraway-shaking hands with Chairman Benson of the committee on arrangements, waving good-bye to Lewis Levy, the publicity man, and complimenting Miles brothers, who had taken the pictures and presented them for the crowd.

A paid first shown stated that the pictures had been shown before the Commercial club through the generosity of Melvin G. Winstock, manager of the People's theatre, and that the series of views of San Francisco newspapers and the portraits shown were with the compliments of the Hill lines, who attended the excursion as manager of the Daily Oregon First, the train newspaper.

MERCHANTS ASK MAYOR TO CURB THE "ORATORS"

At a meeting of the Portland Retail Merchants' association held Monday afternoon, the members unanimously adopted resolutions prepared by the executive committee of the association, urging that Mayor Rushlight be prevailed upon to use every means in his power as mayor of the city to put a stop to further legislative speeches making on the streets of Portland.

The resolutions set forth that an architectural element has been in the habit of damning government, churches, labor unions and other organizations at night street meetings, and that if they are allowed to continue they can only result in a greater disgrace to Portland than was occasioned by the recent Baden-Powell incident.
