

HICKS TRIAL MAY CONTINUE 2 WEEKS

Witnesses Say Pickets Annoyed Them Considerably; Attorneys Stop Wrangle.

Testimony of witnesses examined by the defense this morning in the trial of Burt Hicks, charged with the murder of W. A. Wortman, November 2, 1911, was largely a reiteration of the stories of the actions of the pickets at the various machine shops, as brought out at yesterday's proceedings.

Though the attorneys concerned are of the opinion that the case will run for at least two weeks longer, Judge Galens is expediting matters as much as possible, and better progress is being made than at the beginning.

World See It "No Had Gun." W. V. Benedict, another workman at the Smith & Watson shop, said he had been followed home one night by Wortman and another man.

Knocked Unconscious. "I stayed away from the shop for a week in sympathy with the strikers," said J. N. Maki, an employe at the Smith & Watson shop, on the stand yesterday afternoon.
