The man who really likes to labor, whate'er the tool that he employs-the hammer, trowel, pen or saber-will find this life replete with joys. But sorrow looms up, grim and bulky, to him who worker doesn't languish among the wail-Preparations have been made away like some pipe organ denouncing this and roasting that, and throwing things at J. Pierp Morgan and every other plutocrat. And so I fired him through the transom when he had loafed for half a day, and hired Jim Briggs to wash my hansom, and rid its shining wheels of clay. With noble ire he never bristled, his soul with sorrow wasn't sour; he merely rustled round and whistled and cleaned the blamed rig in an hour. And old Jim Briggs is always busy, for men who want a useful hand just chase him round till they are dizzy, and hand him coin to beat the Copyright, 1911, by George Matthew Adams, Casa Maron
