Following an important conference between the representatives of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation company and the Portland Railway, Light & Power companies and Mayor Rushlight Wednesday afternoon in the mayor's office, the mayor directed City Engineer T. M. Hurlburt to prepare resolutions ordering a change of grade on all street crossing the right of way on the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation company's tracks from East Thirty-seventh street to the city limits. These resolutions will be submitted to the street committee of the council tomorrow afternoon and will in all probability be recommended for adoption.
 Under the proposed plan of the city engineer the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation company will lower the grade of its main line at a cost of approximately $250,000. The city interested property owners and the Portland Railway, Light & Power company will spend a like amount in constructing overhead viaducts, chief of which will be that on the Sandy road crossing, costing something like $33,000. Other viaducts at other grade crossings will cost from $15,000 to $17,000.
 Those present at yesterday's conference were Mayor Rushlight, City Engineer T. M. Hurlburt, City Attorney Frank S. Grant, all representing the city, J. E. Werlein and Engineer Richard of the Portland Railway, Light & Power company, Attorney A. C. Spencer and Chief Engineer G. W. Boschke, representing the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation company, and Attorneys Campbell and Lovett, representing property owners on streets over which viaducts will have to be constructed.

"Surely a wise bunch of huntsmen," remarked the Kink, "I am getting so fond of Trophies I smoke them in my sleep."
