Friends and well wishers of the band are cordially invited to attend the picnic. A special rate for the round trip to Estacada has been secured by the band, which has chartered an open train to take its guests to the beautiful scenic park on Oregon's most beautiful mountain stream. The ticket includes admission to the park and to the dancing platform. The band will dispense music all day. The net proceeds will be contributed to the treasury of the band for use in defraying the expenses of a director and in paying for instruments used by the band. As the musicians of the fire department do not hold commercial concerts, there is not a cent in the treasury at present, and the object of the picnic is to provide funds. The bandmen have Sundays off, so that they will not be picnicking on the city's time.

Say Music Caused Deaths—"Music hath charm" for some people, but not for scores of residents of the vicinity of Eighteenth and Raleigh streets, who this morning filed a lengthy petition with the health and police committee of the city council asking that the Austrian band be restrained from practicing at its headquarters on the corner mentioned. "The noise made by this band," reads the complaint, "has caused deaths among children and adults." The committee, at the suggestion of chairman J. J. Jennings, directed Chief of Police Slover to "subdue" the band.

Elks to Dedicate—At the request of the South Portland Boosters, the grand lodge of Elks has consented to dedicate the first link of the great Ferwittiger boulevard. Johnson appealed to Detectives Mallet and Hammersly and at the time stated that he thought the suspect "friend" had gone to Vancouver. Nelson returned without making any objections.

Must Stop Hypnotic Act—Chief of Police Slover this morning gave orders to Captains Moore and Riley that a small show house at Alberta street and Union avenue which is featuring a hypnotic act, in which boys attempt to break rock with their naked fists and where a woman permits needles and thread to be thrust through her arm, discontinue the act at once. The stroke of paralysis that he suffered Wednesday was the third in the last few years.

ERECTING OF SCENERY ARDUOUS UNDERTAKING

It has taken 25 scene shifters exactly 30 hours to erect the scenery for "The Bridge of the Gods." A race was made against time to permit of definite calculations in readiness for the great Indian drama going on the road shortly. To permit a two-day engagement, "The Bridge of the Gods" equipment will have to be in each city one week, at least two days being required to erect and a similar time to tear down. With an advance car of men to prepare the ground and erect framework, this time may be cut somewhat. It is the "heavy" nature of the scenery in "The Bridge of the Gods," the 75-foot high Mt. Hood that dominates the scene, the Columbia and the range of hills east and west, with all the scenic additions that make the work so arduous. The scenery must stand a strain as it must be strong enough to permit 100 Indians to traverse the trails with torches in their hands.

NEARLY EVERYONE GOES OUT OF TOWN ON FOURTH

Reports from the railroad and street car passenger traffic departments this morning would indicate that nearly every one left the "safe and sane" Fourth in Portland yesterday and journeyed to towns' picnic grounds where arrest did not follow the exploding of a few firecrackers.

The Portland Railway, Light & Power company lines handled in the city and on suburban lines some 400,000 people, including transfers. The biggest crowd was carried on the Vancouver line, fully 10,000 persons going over to the Washington town to watch the military celebration of the Fourth. Much difficulty was experienced in handling the traffic across the ferry and hundreds sighed for the time when the construction of the proposed interstate bridge between Portland and Vancouver over the Columbia will end the necessity for delay that now exists.

The next largest crowd was carried to Oregon City, the number for the day being approximately 5000. Three thousand picnickers sought the park by the Clackamas at Katsaca on the Casadero line, and 2400 journeyed to Bull Run on the Mt. Hood line.

Many more people were carried out of the city than were brought in. With no unusual Fourth of July attractions beyond the band concerts people were uniformly more interested in the more old-fashioned celebrations outside the city.

Figures were not available for the crowds handled by the O. W. R. & P. company to Cascade Locks and Bonnaville, but they were estimated at 2000. All of the trains on the Hill electric lines to North Plains, Tualatin and Willamette valley points were well loaded with pleasure seekers.
