

COMMANDER OF RESERVE FLEETS GUEST OF CITY

Admiral Reynolds and Aides Royally Greeted as Distinguished Visitors During Elks' Week; "Four N" Yell Given.

If there is one man more than any other in Portland who is enjoying the Elks' reunion, that man is Admiral Alfred Reynolds, U. S. N., of the Pacific reserve fleet. The admiral and his aides, Lieutenants Little and Klein of the Pennsylvania, are in the hands of friends and they are not making any plans—simply awaiting the next entertainment.

Automobile trips, dinners, theatre parties and other diversions too numerous to mention have kept the naval officers continuously occupied since their advent Monday afternoon. A feature of the visit of the commanding officer of the Pacific reserve fleet is the absolute informality of every affair of which he has been the center.

A special committee appointed by Mayor Rushlight brought the admiral and his party to Portland to have a good time and while he is here he will not go aboard the Oregon. He is the guest of the whole city, which is tumbling over itself to show the gratitude it collectively feels for the admiral's having sent the battleship to its native state.

Admiral Reynolds is quartered in a suite at the Imperial hotel and the committee in charge of his entertainment has a suite in the same hotel. Every morning a subcommittee of this committee meets and plans the day ahead for the guests. This subcommittee consists of John H. Burgard, George H. Kelly, Russell Hawkins and Tom N. Monks.

Admiral Reynolds was the guest of an informal luncheon at the Commercial club yesterday, following which he was taken to the auto races at the Country club. A visit to the Press club in the evening and attendance on the "beef-steak dinner" given to the newspaper men of the city by the grand lodge, wound up his day.

As the admiral entered the banquet hall in the press room of the Portland Printing company last night, to attend the dinner, he was treated to a pleasant surprise when a stirring "Four N" yell was given by a dozen of the entertainment committee, and taken up by a number of throats. The "Four N" yell is the navy cry in time of football battles.

This evening the admiral, his aides and the officers of the Oregon will be entertained at a dinner at the Arlington club.

SEAT SALESMEN COME TO GRIEF

Men Have No License, So Police Make Them Refund Money Collected.

When seats in the three big grandstands were at a premium last night, two expressmen working in cooperation with some second hand store, proceeded to erect a grandstand of their own on Washington street between Tenth and West Park streets. Over 200 folding chairs, those real comfortable ones, were stretched in a double line on the sidewalk right up close to the curb.

A speller was engaged on the spot and he began by shouting that only a special number of the seats were to be had at the small sum of 25 cents. People made a rush for the chairs, and the originators of the affair soon had their hands and pockets full of quarters. "More seats," some one in charge hollered, and within a few minutes more seats were forthcoming and a third tier of chairs was laid out. They, too, were quickly taken by the members of the crowd.

Everything was working nicely and the people who had paid their two-bit pieces were tickled, for they had even a better seat than those who paid a much larger price to sit in the official grandstands. But their luck changed and so did the luck of the backers of the affair when Police Sergeant Lyons and his squad of officers under him spied the "dolings."

One of the originators was asked by the sergeant if he had a license and when he received a negative reply, orders were given to remove the chairs and refund the money. Then the fun started. The several hundred dollars in quarters which had been collected was no longer the property of the schemers. Under the watchful eye of a patrolman each purchaser of a seat was given back his or her money.

FATHER ELK MEETS SON FROM BATTLESHIP ON STREETS OF PORTLAND

In one case the Elks' convention was more than a reunion of lodge members—it was a reunion of a father and son. The father is F. S. Ivanhoe, district attorney at La Grande, Or., and a member of the B. P. O. E. lodge at that place, and likewise a member of the grand lodge. The son is Forest Ivanhoe, yeoman on the battleship Oregon. "My son and I are both Elks," said Mr. Ivanhoe, "and that helped to bring us together. We met on Washington street after being separated for years and probably, unless by another chance, we would not have met each other for a long time to come." Forest Ivanhoe had himself transferred to the Oregon so that he might attend the Elks' reunion.

Stores in New Journal Building

On the seventh street side of the Journal building are three stores. Two are 14x24. The third is smaller. High class tenants will be given a good lease at low rental. Apply at the Journal office, Fifth and Yamhill streets.

To obtain a powerful searchlight from a comparatively weak battery a French inventor has mounted a number of tungsten lamps on a rotating disk. Each lamp in turn being illuminated but a brief time, their combined rays being collected by a reflector.
