

INSTRUCTORS WALK IN COAST COUNTRY

Institute Workers Make Part of Long Journey From Salem on Foot.

(Salem Bureau of the Journal.)
Salem, Or., Aug. 20.—After walking 84 miles on two laps of the journey, Assistant State School Superintendent E. F. Carleton and C. H. Jones, editor of the Oregon Teachers' Monthly, and son, Allen, returned today from an interesting trip through Coos and Curry counties.

They walked from West Fork to Agnes, a distance of 52 miles in two days, going from Agnes to Gold Beach in a steam launch. After holding a teachers' institute there they walked to Port Orford, 23 miles, in one day. They intended to walk on to Bandon, but at Port Orford they availed themselves of an opportunity to go by way of the ocean in gasoline schooner. At Bandon a school directors' convention was held. The directors voted in favor of invoking the county high school fund law in Coos county.

EVERGLADES POLICY SEVERELY CRITICISED

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Washington, Aug. 20.—The conduct of Assistant Secretary Hayes, of the agricultural department, was severely criticized in the majority report of the Everglades investigation committee. Hayes comes in for severe criticism on account of his relations with Drainage Engineer Wright. It is shown that Hayes' conduct has not been in harmony with "proper standards of official propriety" and is not official rectitude. The minority report acquitted Hayes of the charge of insubordination and taking advantage of opportunity to make quick money. C. G. Elliott and A. D. Moorehouse were dissatisfied from the drainage service, and the reports hold that the action was at least ill-advised. The trouble came up over the government projects to drain large areas of everglades in Florida and Lake Mattamuskeet in North Carolina.

BETS ON "SURE THINGS" WRECK CAREERS OF 2 TORONTO BANK CLERKS

(United Press Leased Wire.)

According to the confessions laid before the police, Harris did not fulfill expectations and their efforts to recoup their losses were in vain.

AMERICAN ELEPHANT KILLER DEAD BY SHOT

(United Press Leased Wire.)
London, Aug. 20.—James Wood Rogers, American ivory gatherer, is dead. Rogers was one of the most unique characters in Africa, and it took a detachment of troops to capture him—dead. For years Rogers had been an elephant poacher, a man who made a fortune by illicit trading in ivory. By creating himself a sort of king over the natives Rogers was allowed to carry on his lawless trade. Finally the government planned to put a stop to the devastation of the elephant centers and a body of troops was sent out to bring in the old man.

Concerns Dispute Over "Insects."

(Salem, Or., Aug. 20.—For the first time Secretary of State Ben Odell has invoked the authority given him by an act of the 1911 legislature to cancel a registered trademark and allow another company to register it. The trademark is "Insecto," which had been registered by A. A. Johnson of the Crescent Chemical company of Portland. The Insecto disinfecting company produced affidavits and other evidence that it had been using the trademark, although not registered, long before the Crescent company. Johnson has applied to the United States patent office at Washington, D. C., to register the name under the federal statutes and it is thought here that the matter will not be settled until it is decided by the courts.
