

JEALOUS WOMAN MAY BE CAUSE OF MURDER IN AUTO

Police Redoubling Efforts to Find Slayer of H. G. Barr; New Clues Said to Have Been Discovered by Sleuths.

Working on the theory that a woman's jealousy or the jealous malice of a man was the motive for the murder of Harry G. Barr, automobile owner and chauffeur, whose body was found yesterday morning near Dead Man's curve on the Linnton road, officers of the detective department are going into affairs of Barr's personal acquaintance with women in an effort to find a tangible clue to the identity of the young man's assailant.

One woman in particular, said to be a nurse and an attendant of Barr, is believed to have been intimately acquainted with Barr that she would cause him trouble, because he slighted her or because she was jealous of his attentions to some other woman. Chauffeurs at the Multnomah hotel recalled yesterday morning that Barr was heard to say shortly before leaving the hotel to take a party to "The Hut," on the Linnton road: "If that nurse calls up again tell her that I have gone home for the night."

Cautions to Keep Silent.
Chauffeurs employed by Barr and many of his friends who knew of his love affairs have been instructed by the officers to say nothing further about the case, and they refuse to give information which they admit might be interesting.

C. A. Bartcher, the traveling man, who, with C. W. Barlow, a friend, and a woman, was taken to "The Hut" Monday night by Barr, and who was held yesterday at the city jail as a witness, has been liberated, but was cross-examined again this morning by detectives. The woman, who was also quizzed by the detectives, was not heard. Captain Haty refuses to give her name. Officers working on the case are of the opinion that the trio taken to "The Hut" by Barr in the car in which he was murdered within a few hours later, are in no wise connected with the crime.

The officers have learned that Barr had a number of women friends, and that because he apparently made favorites of some of them, the others harbored jealousy.

Another Theory Entertained.
One theory advanced, also, is that Barr had been paying attention to another man's wife, and that because of threats made by the husband in the case within the past few days, Barr had reason to believe that there might be trouble for him Monday night. This might account for a statement made by L. L. Will, Barr's employe, that Barr was apparently loath to make the trip to "The Hut" on Monday night.

Another point which has not yet been cleared up is whether Barr came back into town after leaving "The Hut," and where, if it was not in the city, he picked up the persons believed to have been riding with him when he was shot. L. L. Will said yesterday that Barr, though a careful driver on the city streets, made it a practice to speed up on country roads, and he believes that Barr had been alone in his machine, would have been going so fast that had he been shot from the roadside his car would have been wrecked the second the bullet struck him.

Man and Woman Suspected.
From what they have learned and intimate the officers have deduced that Barr very probably had made a previous engagement with his murderers, that he left "The Hut" about 9 o'clock Monday night to keep this engagement, and that he had not proceeded very far with them when he was shot down. It is thought there were a man and a woman riding with Barr when the shooting occurred, and that when Barr refused to accede to the demands of his companions, whatever they might have been, he was killed. The man was probably assisted by the woman in dragging the body from the automobile across the road, and rolling it down the embankment.

Mystery of Motive Is Still Unsolved Nurse Girl Suspected by Detectives

This is merely conjecture, however, the officers admitting that they know nothing definite of Barr's actions after leaving the Hut.

The theory that Barr was shot while in the city, and that his body was taken to Dead Man's Curve and thrown out of the machine, is not substantiated by the appearance of the automobile. The blood stains are all on the front seats and on the floor of the car in front. It would have been difficult for a person to drive the car and keep a limp body propped up in the front seat, or even for a person in the rear seat to keep a dead body from falling out. There are no blood stains in the rear seats.

Had Many Girl Friends.
Though police records in the case are lacking, Chief Siover and Detective Hammersly have a recollection that about three months ago a complaint was made to police officers that two men were living with two young girls in a house on the east side. Hammersly says that when he and Detective Smith went to the house to investigate they found both Harry and George Barr there. The boys denied having girls there, Hammersly says, but stalled around so that the officers were led to believe that the girls had been there but had made a getaway through a back door when the policemen arrived.

That a lingering desire for revenge on the part of the fathers of these girls was the motive for Barr's murder is among the conjectures offered. Incident to the stories of Barr's intimacy with girls and women is the fact that he qualified on Saturday last on the bonds of his employe, L. L. Will, who was arrested on a charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor girl. Presiding Judge Morrow asked yesterday that another bondsman be provided to replace Barr.

Mrs. J. N. Julian, a woman indicted with Will in the county jail in default of bonds of $750. Mrs. Julian says she had only seen Barr once, and that on the occasion of a business visit he made to her husband.

At a post mortem examination at the morgue yesterday afternoon the bullet, .38 calibre, was removed from near the top of Barr's skull, on the right hand side, its course having been upward from the point of entry just back of and below the left ear.

An inquest will be held tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. Funeral services for Barr will be held at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon from his home, 352 East Fifteenth street north.

HOW MATINEE GIRL WON ACTOR'S HEART

Robert Wayne, heavy man of the Baker Players.

When Robert Wayne, the popular heavy man of the Baker players was playing leads with the Corse Payton Stock company in Philadelphia several years ago, he lost his suitcase. His trunks were in the baggage car, but the stores were closed, and he had just time to inform the clerk of his plight before hurrying to the theatre. But here was where the matinee girl found a place in Mr. Wayne's heart that she has held ever since. She heard of the handsome actor's mishap. When Mr. Wayne returned to the hotel, he found a package daintily done up in violet-scented tissue and tied with narrow pink ribbons to which a note was attached as follows:

"I have heard of the awful calamity that has befallen you. Will you accept the enclosed for tonight? To you it will be only a convenience, but to me an honor that I shall always cherish in my memory. My maid will call for it in the morning."

The actor smiled, there was really no choice in the matter, so he accepted. That night as the moon crept through the window, its mellow light illumined an unusual and almost startling picture—that of a hero of many dramas slumbering peacefully in one of those graceful poses that every well regulated leading man assumes, even in his sleep—amid a mass of softest silk, dainty lace and baby ribbon.

Mr. Wayne is married now, but he refuses to divulge the secret of whether Mrs. Wayne is the heroine of this episode or not.

COURT REFUSES TO HEAR DEFENSE IN CASE

Judge McGinn left the bench yesterday, refusing to hear the defense in the case of C. R. Templeton against William E. and Martha Cook and S. R. Wentworth. The attorneys continued with their case, put in all evidence, made arguments, made up the record and went home. It was late in the afternoon, when the court closed, the two attorneys, court stenographers and a few spectators being present.

Early in the case Judge McGinn announced that he had his mind made up. In fact, he announced last week that he had his decision ready, when he was informed the case had been sent to his court.

"I'll do like Dutch justice," said the judge at that time. "I will take it under advisement for three days, then decide in favor of the plaintiff."

And the judge did it. Attorney George S. Shepherd represented the three defendants. He insisted his evidence be submitted in order to make the record for the supreme court. Attorney R. R. Dunway represented Templeton. The suit was to recover on a mortgage bond of $2300.
