Proposed Interurban Car System on Seventh Street Meets Little Favor.

Seventh-street property owners, or rather what appeared to be a majority of the holders of realty on that thoroughfare, went on record yesterday as opposing the granting of an interurban fore adjournment was taken it was well understood that if the council granted the Heusner franchise, the property owners would take the question before the courts and would fight it out to the court of last resort. Only two of the 40 or 50 property owners present favored granting the franchise. They were Whitney L. Boise and C. W. Hodson, to whom all sorts of hot questions were fired during the progress of the debate. Abe Tichner, owner of the Eiler building at Seventh and Alder streets, took a leading part in the discussion. J. C. Beck, who acted as chairman of the meeting, announced that practically every owner of Seventhstreet frontage is opposed to granting the Heusner franchise. Theodore B. Wilcox declared that Seventh street is the most valuable street in the city and that it should always be kept free from interurban traffic. He expressed a willingness to subscribe to a fund to be used in defeating the franchise, if granted, before the courts.
