Patrolman Gould, who some months ago found a cow wandering about Washington and West Park streets, and who refused to lead the bovine to the pound when ordered to do so, found a nice Jersey cow early yesterday morning at King and Washington streets, which seemed lost. No one ordered him to take the animal to the city pound, at Sixteenth and Madison streets, but getting a rope, Gould gently prodded "bossy." At the city pound the animal was locked up for being on the streets after hours.
