

WILL THE 23,000 MAJORITY AGAINST WOMEN STAND PAT

Leaders of the Suffrage Movement Think the Men Are Won Over; Antis Believe They Are Not.

In view of the activity of the women of Portland in today's election regarding the suffrage amendment, a few words on the probable outcome from those favoring and those opposed to suffrage, will be read with interest.

Mrs. Abigail Scott Duniway, president Oregon Equal Suffrage League: "I sit serenely in my invalid's chair, leaving the ballot with my friends, the men of Oregon. We have made a quiet but thorough canvass of the situation and have reason to feel quite certain that the cause of woman's suffrage will be favorably voted on today in the state of Oregon. We shall not be disappointed if we run behind in the city of Portland, but we confidently expect to make up more in the state at large than we lose in this city. My 43 years of service in this cause is drawing to a close. I wish especially to thank the press, the clergy, professional men and the voters generally for their assistance in this struggle for the freedom of the women of Oregon."

Mrs. Sarah A. Evans, chairman campaign committee Woman's club: "The outlook is favorable, I think. I do not expect Multnomah county to carry, but I think the vote against suffrage will be pared down so much, that the strong sentiment for suffrage which we know exists in the outlying counties, will give us a majority of at least 5000 for the amendment."

Miss Henrietta Felling, vice president Oregon State association, opposed to extension of suffrage to women: "I am very sure of the strong sentiment against granting equal suffrage. We have worked to the best of our ability to down the amendment, but if we are defeated we will go down with color flying, but we are hoping the men will be sensible and vote for the best interests of their state and nation."

Depend on Men.
Dr. Esther Pohl-Lovejoy, president of Everybody's Equal Suffrage League: "I am certain we will win, for I feel that the men of Oregon realize as never before the humiliating position the women of our state are placed in by being hemmed in on all sides by states who allow their women to vote. I think the amendment will carry by a big majority, even in Multnomah county. To be sure straw votes have sometimes shown a majority opposing us, but I do not think the localities in which they were taken were average ones. If we do fail, however, we will start tomorrow to win two years hence."

Mrs. J. F. Bailey, president of association opposed to suffrage: "I still feel that 23,000 men are not going to desert us in two years. That was the majority which defeated suffrage two years ago, hence I feel very confident that the ballot is not going to be thrust upon us at this time."

Miss Emma Wold, president College Equal Suffrage League: "Those who have been deeply engaged in the fight are I think the least able to judge of the outcome, because we have not come into contact with the opposition to any great extent. It seems to me that the outlook is good, however, and I am hopeful. If we should fail no doubt the fight will be carried on, probably by new blood as those who have worked in this campaign are very weary and will be glad to have others take up the work actively."

Antis Are Bitter.
Mrs. R. W. Lewis, member executive committee opposed to suffrage: "It is very hard to fight against people who are untrue, and as for myself I must say that I am disheartened and ashamed of my sex. The manner in which those favoring suffrage have gone about it to win their point has grounded my belief as an anti-suffragist more firmly than ever. Their aggressiveness, I think, only a sample of what they will be if they ever get hold of the real thing in the way of the ballot."

Mrs. Henry Waldo Coe, acting president State Equal Suffrage League: "The outlook is bright and encouraging. Outside of the encouragement we get from the suffrage workers themselves we are much encouraged by the attitude of the men and that is what will tell today, you know. Many men who were antis at the last election have come around to our way of thinking this time. Then, too, I am sure we lost many votes two years ago by the property clause. The elimination of this, will, I think, help us materially. We can scarcely expect to carry Portland. History shows us that on account of organized vice, which is always opposed to suffrage, an amendment to enfranchise women never carries in cities. If by any chance we should lose we will be ready to start in again tomorrow morning."

Mrs. Gordon Voorhies, member executive committee opposed to women suffrage: "I think we will be successful in voting down the amendment. Of course suffragists are more given to expressing their views than we are, thus it might seem that they are about to sweep the state, but I think the counting of the votes will disclose another phase to the question."

DARING ACROBATS HAVE CHARMED LIFE

Falls and Falls, eccentric acrobats at the Empress, have an act which was originated in a barn in Philadelphia, the tumbles, twists and turns of the vaudeville pair having been perfected by them after they had rigged up home-made trapezes made of broomhandles and clothes line taken surreptitiously when their trusting mothers were not in sight. In real life the acrobats are Archie Falls and Frank Green, both Yankees. They have been on the stage for more than 11 years and are listed among the best comedy tumblers in the business. In all their time before the public neither one has been injured, a record seldom equaled by vaudevillians engaged in such a hazardous act.

Mrs. Millie Trumbull: "I think we are going to win. Suffrage has all the support it had before and in addition has the support of the politicians and of many others whom we did not have before. If we don't win, we will start in at once to get it next time."

Bran Bath.
Dear Mrs. Lee—Will you please give directions for making a bran bath? I am told these baths are good when the skin is irritated, as mine is. E. F. Put from three to five pounds of bran into a bag and boil for half an hour in a large kettle of water. Then turn bran and water into the bath and cool to the desired temperature with cold water.

TEACHERS' SERIES OF LECTURES ENDS

Many Heard Prof. Baumgardt at Lincoln High School Last Night.

The final lecture in the Baumgardt series at the Lincoln high school was given last night. Notwithstanding the many other attractions and the excitement due to election eve, the auditorium was well filled and the audience was taken on a word and picture trip to Venice, the City of Dreams.

Few cities afford greater opportunity for the artist and writer than this Dream City, and the lecture last night was illustrated with 123 views, executed in water color, giving not only a portrayal of Venice today, but also of Venice at the height of her glory, in the days of Enrico Dandolo, Foscarini and Fallari. In the course of the lecture Professor Baumgardt said:

"Hardly could a more effective illustration be found of the paramount influence of geographical position than that afforded by Venice. Little did it occur to refugees from the conquering hordes of Attila in 452, when they drove their first piles on the mud banks of the Adriatic, that they were laying foundations for a republic destined to endure more than 1200 years. Her insular position, through the skill of her engineers, made Venice practically unassailable. From insignificance she rose to hold the proud dominion of the seas and had at one time 3200 vessels netting their owners 40 per cent. Her agents were stationed in every important city in Europe.

"Expressed in modern value, her exports amounted to $400,000,000 a year. Yet after all, she was but a city with never more than 200,000 inhabitants; a city nevertheless, most beautiful in the world; for centuries the center of European civilization, whose ambassadors abroad rivaled those of kings and empires; a city which marked the limits of barbarous ambitions, played a most important role in the crusades, and almost rivaled Florence in the impetus she gave to the Renaissance.

"The discovery of America and the circumnavigation of Africa sounded the deathknell to all this greatness and imperishable fame. The commercial equilibrium of the world had been shaken, the Mediterranean ceased to be the most important commercial highway and became instead a relatively unimportant inland sea. Venice was dethroned and forgotten. Finally came Napoleon Bonaparte, that stern reality, with whom former greatness and empty survival of medievalism counted for naught. He saw the last flickering light of the Venetian republic and blew it out. So perishes earthly glory."

The Busy Woman's Off Hours

By Hildegard Hawthorne.
We aren't in the business or professional world long without discovering that the person who does things by halves is not the person who succeeds. Whatever you are at, if you have to get anywhere with it, you have to tackle whole-heartedly and with all your powers. Whether your wagon is hitched to a star or to a mule, you have to put your shoulder to the wheel and shove for all there is in you if you want to get it started and keep it going.

Spurred by the keen competition that is striving on every side of you in the world of work, and exhilarated by that electric tenseness of exertion that gets into blood and brain, you are usually willing and eager enough to hump yourself with the rest.

All very good and extremely necessary. But how few among us busy women realize that it is equally necessary—perhaps more so in a lifetime—to be just as whole hearted in the employment of our off time. That our rest, recreation, and amusement mustn't be done by halves, either.

But somehow we won't give these things serious attention. We use our busy hours with the utmost waste and economy; our free ones we waste and slur and misuse any old way. Yet they are the ones from which we must get all our reserves of health and strength, our breadth of culture, and the refreshment and stimulus of new experiences and social intercourse.

When we gulp our breakfast down in a hurry, don't give ourselves time to swallow more than a hot drink at a soda fountain for lunch, and "make out" with something from the delicatessen store for dinner, washed down with a cup of tea, we are doing things by halves, and we'll pay for it with failure in the end, quite as surely as though it were our business we were neglecting.

There are so many ways of doing it by halves. That's what we do when we cut out the daily walk for dawdle through it, instead of moving cleanly and alertly; or when we don't take enough sleep; or when we are constantly dragging our working problems into what should be our carefree time; or when we refuse a chance for a pleasant outing because we think we can't manage it, when a bit of careful planning would easily make the opportunity—in these and many other ways we are doing things by halves.

Don't do it! Don't let yourself live by halves any more than you allow yourself to work by halves. It never pays, and, though the results may not be perceptible quite so soon in your life as they would be in your work, they may be more fatal in the long run.

You are quite as important as your job, if only you would believe it, and owe yourself at least an equal consideration.
