

Events in Society

It is imperative that those contributing news for the Sunday society pages should have it ready by the deadline of the society editor not later than Friday. News is always welcome and those who have affairs early in the week would confer a great favor by sending their reports in as soon after as possible.

BABIES reigned supreme in Portland society yesterday, so even Sunday was not overlooked as a day for entertainment during the week. Two prominent society matrons presided at christening festivities yesterday afternoon. Both babies responded to the pouring of the water with a healthy cry. All doubts are therefore dispelled as to bad luck for the future.

CLAIMS LEONARDO'S MASTERPIECE IS RUINED

London, Jan. 27.—A dispatch to the Observer from Paris says:

"The missing La Joconde, the famous work of Leonardo Da Vinci, has never been found for the simple reason that it has never been lost. The treasured canvas, however, may be lost to the art world, as it has been accidentally spoiled by acid, but it has never left the Louvre, as was widely heralded several months ago."

MOTHER'S BOY—OR GIRL? WHICH?

Journal Will Give Prizes for Best Answers to Old Question.

Does the old-fashioned mother lavish her best love and care on her girls or her boys—especially her eldest boy?

This is a question that has never been settled. The Journal wants to find out what the people of Portland think on the matter. That is why it will award a cash prize of $10 for the best article on the subject; $5 for the second best, and for the next five best, two seats each at the Baker theatre, good for any performance next week, when the Baker actors will appear in the play, "Mother."

The play is a gem of its kind. It brings out strongly the usual conflicts of interests between boys and girls in a family. Naturally, the mother who adopts a certain attitude toward her children follows the course which the author believes mothers do. And the play, by the way, was written by a former Portland boy, who now resides in New York.

But what he believes may be entirely different from what others believe. Anyone raised in a family of boys and girls can be counted on to have a decisive opinion based on experience. And it is opinions based on actual experience that The Journal is after.

"Mother" will be staged by the Baker players for the week commencing February 2. For this reason the contest will run this week only. Opportunities for winning the prizes are equal to all. Here are the conditions:

All letters must be carefully and legibly written upon one side of the paper only, and must be mailed to the Contest Editor of The Journal.

Letters must be received not later than Thursday.

Letters must not contain over 200 words.

Full name and address must accompany each letter.

Watch next Sunday's Journal for the names of the prize winners.

1000 MICHIGANDERS "BUY OUT" THEATRE

Michigan songs and decorations will impart a Michigan atmosphere as nearly as possible to the performance at the Baker theatre tomorrow evening.

This will be for the pleasure of the 1000 former Michigan people who have bought out the house for the benefit of the philanthropic fund of the Michigan Society of Oregon. The purpose of the Michiganders is to find work for the workless, and a bed for the ill and equip two information bureaus one for the benefit of Michigan people who expect to come to Oregon, and one for the benefit of Michigan people who are now living here, but who do not know the facts of Oregon's opportunities as well as they should. Although the Michigan society has made an arrangement with Manager George L. Baker, of the Baker theatre, whereby they receive the profits of the performance, the price has not advanced and tickets may be purchased by anyone desiring to attend, either at the box office or from one of the five stations established by the society. A report yesterday that the Michigan society and their friends were to attend the Baker tonight caused some confusion, and it is therefore emphasized that the Michigan attendance will be tomorrow evening, Tuesday, January 28.

WOMAN CHANGES HER MIND IN TIME

Writes Letter Asking Clerk to Call Off Divorce, Telegraphs for Final Decree.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 27.—County Clerk Harry L. Leland has a letter and a telegram and a package of divorce papers in his hands to show that the imputed proclivity of woman to change her mind in the twinkling of an eye is not all a myth.

A year ago today William O. Truax got an interlocutory decree against Florence E. Truax on the ground of desertion.

On Friday morning's mail this letter reached County Clerk Leland:

"San Francisco, Jan. 22, 1913.

"County Clerk, Los Angeles:

"Dear Sir: There was a divorce granted to W. O. Truax from Florence E. Truax, which should be final in a day or two.

"I wish to notify all concerned that we have made up and wish to have the divorce called off. Please send me the necessary papers to show I am a legal wife. Or will it be necessary for us to be married over again?"

"Yours respectfully,

"Mrs. Florence E. Truax."

But the hope of renewed domestic felicity in the house of Truax was shattered by this telegram to Leland:

"Oakland, January 26:

"County Clerk, Los Angeles:

"Florence E. Truax has changed her mind. Grant final divorce.

"Florence E. Truax."

The telegram was timed 10:33 a. m. In consequence the final decree was entered on the records.

BRINGS HEAVEN INTO THE WORLD

Religion Is Not Just to Bring Men Into Heaven, Says Doctor Young.

In his sermon last night in the First Methodist Episcopal church, on "A Manly Religion," Rev. Benjamin Young, pastor, stated that religion must touch the heart and head of a man and must even make his toes tingle, and that a religion or a profession which does not ring true is one of the most contemptible things in the world. The services last night were very well attended as were the services yesterday morning when the auditorium was filled to overflowing.

Dr. Young said in part:

"A man in Christ. The words are from the Apostle Paul, who knew full well their meaning. It is the plus element which Jesus Christ furnishes to the human soul which makes man most valuable. It is this 'man in Christ' who in the centuries has made the largest contribution to the moral wealth and progress of the world. Civilization owes much of its strength to that doctrine which was preached in Europe by the apostle to the gentiles. That prayer meeting in the dungeon at Philippi made a large contribution to modern civilization."

"Man of himself possesses dignity. In some sense he is a replica of the infinite. Imagination and will, dignity and inherent power testify to the glory of human personality. When this is reinforced by the plus element which Jesus Christ furnishes, then man comes to be at his best. In other words religion is the most inspiring factor that can come into a human life."

"Of course, it must be sensible. Religion does not mean that a man shall part with his wits. Religion means the soundest wisdom. It is this balance so well preserved in the life of the Galilean which has caused him to be the miracle and the wonder of the ages. Religion is for life. It must be practical and come close to the men who live in this world. It is, of course, to get men into heaven, but it is also to get heaven into the world. You can only get heaven and God into the world as it comes by way of transformed human character. The personality of God comes into contact with the human personality and makes it to glow with beauty and truth and all that is wholesome and good."

"Religion ought to be workable. It must apply itself to the problems of actual life. It is concerned with the sin and the misery of the world. It must protect the child and it must plead on his behalf. It must stand for that which means a better womanhood and against that which preys upon her. It must battle with vice and with everything which deals death to the finer things of the world. Religion is not some holy thing to be kept apart from the world lest it become contaminated; it is in the world to transform it and to bring light and hope and larger opportunity and redemption for the children of men."

"Religion must be manly. Said Job Ship—the hero of the novel, 'A Singular Life'—of a certain minister, 'That's not a fellow in a minister's cloak; that's a Christian man.' What finer definition of a Christian than this given in the slums of Wendover, 'the Christ man.' Men read of religion in books but the world likes to read religion in life. You can give it an interpretation in the office or in the store or on the street."

"Religion must be brotherly and sympathetic. I do not mean that it shall be weak or sickly. It must be strong with a fight in its heart for that which is just and true and good, but it must be tolerant and sympathetic, reaching out toward the sorrow and heartache of the world."

"It must be genuine and attractive. A religion or a profession which does not ring true is one of the most contemptible things in the world. It must shine out in deed and come out in kindly word and manifest itself in every phase of life's activity. Religion must touch the heart and the head of a man, yes, it must even make his very toes tingle. It will not make a kicker out of him, but it will make the splendid 'man in Christ.'"

DON'T GIVE UP JOB WHEN YOU MARRY

That Is Mrs. Belmont's Advice to Girls, but She Tells Them to Wed.

New York, Jan. 27.—More than 200 suffragette leaders and a squad of prominent anti-suffragettes sat with bated breath at the Republican club as Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont was taken to task for a statement attributed to her in which she was said to have advised girls not to give up a good position to marry.

The meeting, which had been an open discussion of the suffrage question, was nearing its close when Mrs. James Lee Laddlaw jumped to her feet and demanded that Miss Alice Chittenden tell to whom she referred when she said in her speech that a suffragist was justifying the non-marriage idea into the minds of young girls.

"The lady is present and can answer that question for herself," replied Miss Chittenden, looking across the speaker's table at Mrs. Belmont.

"I never made such a statement," cried Mrs. Belmont, rising angrily to her feet. "I have never advised girls not to marry."

"But I am sure I read somewhere that you said so," retorted Miss Chittenden.

"Well, I am not responsible for everything one reads about me," said Mrs. Belmont. "But what I do believe," she continued, still glaring at her accuser, "is that young women who are earning a good salary should not necessarily give up their jobs when they marry. Why shouldn't she contribute her share to the support of the household the same as is done in Europe?"
