Jedediah Smith, now forgotten, but in his time one of America's great explorers, is shown making his difficult way across the desert from Green River to the Spanish settlements at San Diego with a party of hardy adventurers. The journey was completely successful, and its conclusion, in 1826 marked the charting of a previously unknown territory.

PONY TRACKS IN THE BUFFALO TRAIL — By Frederic Remington

Remington's study of picking pony tracks on the buffalo trail shows one of the most delicate jobs a trapper can attempt. Indians, when they met a buffalo herd, rode in ahead of them and let those thousands of hoofs cover up their tracks. It took a mighty good trapper to spot the track of a pony among the scramble of grass and earth left by the buffalo. — Wm. F. Cody ("Buffalo Bill")
