I refer to that scintillating aggrega-tion of Christian gentlemen who so elo-quently resented the imputation that they would employ a man once convict-ed of crime. Such a puerile, inane, asinine question to ask a professed and professional Christian gentleman, as to whether he would employ an ex-convict Of course, the conference represented the flower of the ministry, and each message was the cumulative result of a lifetime of deliberation. They were ushered into our midst with extravagant praise, and much was expected of them; they departed unob-served, and little is expected of them. As a moral force for the betterment of humanity they are absolutely nil, and their only contribution was their declared hostility to the man who had been cast into prison. It is very pos-sible that our penal institutions harbor a few innocent men, and that the guilty, garbed in the mantle of respectability, declare the ex-convict a foe and irredeemably lost.
