

'SPEND-A-MILLION' CHARLIE GATES IN PORTLAND AWHILE

Gentleman Who Says His Middle Name Is "Speed" Stops Off to Do a Little Shopping Here Today.

"Young Charlie" Gates, who has been credited with saying that his middle name is "Speed," son of the late John W. ("Bet-you-a-million") Gates, spent this morning in Portland—"doing a little shopping," he said.

Mr. Gates has been "doing" Canada in his private car "Superb," with a party of New York "college chums." In Portland his car was parked at the North Bank station and he pushed out again before noon, bound for Glacier national park.

It might have been that Mr. Gates was surrounded by a heavy bodyguard of porters, valets, etc., and that one couldn't get within halting distance of him. Again it might have been that to prove himself a good fellow, and to live up to his nick-name of "Spend-a-million," he greeted one enthusiastically and with a double handful of gold with the request that you go buy yourself a grape juice "high ball" or something.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Gates behaves himself much as any other wealthy young American might do, and he looked perfectly human, too. Clean cut, slightly below medium height, with a fashionable close cropped mustache, light clothes, loud shirt, an shoes, strapping and carrying a rawhide cane whip and dog chain, without the dog, young Gates looked anything but the profligate son he is popularly supposed to be. He wasn't even smoking a cigarette.

One of the latest exploits credited to "Young Charlie" is that of chartering a 90-mile-an-hour special train for a joy ride from Minneapolis to New York. It was common report, also, that just before this junket his father-in-law, Frank Hopwood, knocked him down in a Minneapolis cafe because his son-in-law was spending money too freely and too foolishly. Mr. Gates has denied this, flatly, and it may be said in passing that if Mr. Hopwood did score a knockdown he must be some bitter, or else he landed one when "Young Charlie" wasn't looking.

"I haven't a newspaper story in the world," said Mr. Gates at his car this morning. "All I can say is that I have been up in Canada with a party of friends, just a sightseeing and pleasure trip, and we have had a delightful time. I may say also, that we rather vote Portland the finest city on the coast. We are now going to take in Glacier national park, and may take in a general swing around the circle."

Mr. and Mrs. Gates and their friends arrived in Portland this morning, paying special attention to the Chinese and Japanese curio shops.

SOUND LOGGERS MAY CURTAIL THEIR OUTPUT

H. C. Clair, president of the Columbia River Loggers' association, returned yesterday from Seattle, where on Saturday he attended the monthly meeting of the Pacific Coast Loggers' association, of which Mr. Clair is also president.

Mr. Clair states that there is a strong opposition among the loggers of the Grays Harbor and Puget sound districts to curtail the output of their camps for some time in order to establish the lumber market on a firmer basis than for the present. In the Columbia river district, practically all of the camps are quiet for the month and the quantity of saw logs in the water is said to show no great surplus.

"The loggers are willing to operate as long as they can get some profit," said Mr. Clair, "but feel that it is poor business to cut logs and get only nominal pay for the labor and the stumpage. They are willing to do so for a time, if the lumber market is full, but not continually. We expect the demand for lumber to improve, however, later in the year."

BENHAM FALLS DAM OPERATIONS CONTINUE

Work will be continued by the United States reclamation service this summer at Benham Falls, 12 miles south of Bend, Oregon, for the purpose of determining the practicality of constructing a big dam there for irrigation purposes.

Diamond drill operations have reached a depth of 80 feet. While bed rock has not yet been touched, those in charge of the work are hopeful of striking it soon.

The work is being carried on under state and federal appropriations of $100,000 under the supervision of the federal reclamation service. Below Bend two crews of men are camped near Redmond and Opel City. They are surveying the river under the direction of Engineer John T. Whistler of Portland.
