Oregon Agricultural College, Corvalis, Or., Sept. 1 .- The deadly fireblight, characterized as the worst disease that affects apple and pear trees, can be chacked by organized campaigns con-ducted on the lines of the standard treatment, according to Professor H. Indepedence, Or., Sept. 1 .- Polk couy's crops have so far "panned out" excellently. It has been several years since such a large crop of all kinds of grains was harvested in this section of the Willamette valley, and the results secured by the farmers who have had their grain threshed are highly satisfactory. In the Suver section nearly ne-half of the threshing is completed. Wheat made over 20 bushels an acre as a general average. Winter oats averaged 37 bushels. One load of wheat bundles, belonging to Joseph Murphy in the Oak Dale sec-tion, made 18 bushels. Although that section is well suited to profitable grain raising, more hay is raised there than Larkin Grice, a farmer and fruitgrower living one mile north of Eola, who has threshed several of the largest fields in that vicinity, says crop conditions there are excellent. Thomas W. Brunk has a field which yielded over 25 bushels to the acre, and his oats averaged 42 bushels per acre.

Hay averaged two and one-half tons an acre. The oat yield at the Cronley

Hops in the Eola district are exceptionally good.
