RENEW MARRIAGE VOWS AFTER SIXTY YEARS

McMinnville, Or., Sept. 13.—Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kirby of McMinnville celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding day Wednesday, by renewing their vows at a high mass at which Rev. Father Raymond, pastor of the St. James parish, officiated. After the ceremony at the church the party went to the farm of Dave Kirby, a son of the couple, and there partook of dinner.

The Kirbys were married at Hamilton, Antario, Canada, September 18, 1853, and came to Oregon in 1874, purchasing a farm in the Bellevue settlement. Later they moved to McMinnville, where they live at College Side.

Beauty Hints.

These busy days, when one must plan closely in order to manage to live 24 hours a day, it is a comfort to know of a complexion cream which acts in several capacities. Such a one was recently called to my attention. Easily applied, this cream both soothes and whitens the skin and at the same time nourishes the tissues. It is declared that it will not promote the growth of hair.

The Lunch Basket.

The lunch basket is a problem which confronts every mother with school children, and she is always glad for new ideas to fill it, not only with nourishing food, but little surprises which will tempt the young appetite.

To make an appetizing lunch basket it is necessary to wrap the food in waxed paper so it will not look mussy and will remain fresh.

If the child is to remain well and make progress in his lessons he must be properly nourished, and a luncheon which consists of cake, pickles and a dried sandwich is certainly not conducive to good health.

It is well to vary the menu, but fruit is a daily necessity, a peach, apple or pear with a meat or nut sandwich and some small cookies or ginger cakes make an ideal luncheon for the school child. A few nuts may be put in every day, and occasionally good candy or a piece of sweet chocolate.

Many mothers when making rice pudding or baked beans bake an individual dish for the lunch box. Rice may be made into so many delightful dishes. The pudding may contain raisins, figs or peaches; all are digestible and nourishing.

Some children are fond of jam and marmalade, and brown bread sandwiches filled with raspberry jam or orange marmalade make a delightful change.

Cheese possesses great nutritive value, but it should never be put in the lunch basket, for the odor always penetrates the other food, even if it be wrapped separately.

The city child, who goes to and from school on a trolley car may not have an appetite like his country cousin, but he will eat more and be healthier if his lunch basket is attractive in appearance and filled with the right kind of food.

The Chin Strap.

If you have treated yourself to a peep at the smart new fall headgear—and if you haven't you don't know what you are missing, for it is more fascinating this season than ever—you have undoubtedly been introduced to the coquettish chin strap of black velvet which adds the smart touch to so many of the fall hats. We are told that in New York every other woman is wearing a fall hat fitted with a chin strap. Will Portland get the craze to that extent is a question, however the straps are immensely becoming to most people, but one needs to be careful to choose a width that becomes them and not one that is either too wide or too narrow.

French Olive Oil.

At the big store on Fourth street where one always finds the new things in the "good to eat" line, I was shown some new imported olive oil. It comes in large tin cans and is said to be much milder and more delicate in flavor than the California oil.

Worth Knowing.

After boiling salt beef leave two or three carrots in the salt liquor until cold. The carrots wil absorb the salt and the liquor can be used for soup.

If you are mixing a pudding or cake with a wooden spoon beat the mixture with the back of the spoon. It is far easier and becomes beautifully light in half the time.

When a kettle is badly burned, do not fill it with water, but set it aside to cool, then put in a handful of washing soda and water and allow it to boil for an hour or more.

Paint, no matter how hard and dry, can be taken out of woolen clothing by using a solution of equal parts of ammonia and turpentine. Saturate the spot two or three times, then wash out with soapsuds.

Scintella Cloth.

Scintella cloth is the name of a lovely new silken fabric which was introduced this week by a down town shop. It is a two tone cloth of silk and wool, some plain and some brocaded, but its chief charm lies in its softness and shimmery beauty. It is the output of one of the largest manufactories in the country and thus carrying its name is highly recommended. It is especially adapted to afternoon and evening gowns. It comes in a variety of colors, the wisteria and silver being a particularly charming combination.

Bartlett Pears Are In.

Those luscious golden pears—Bartletts—are now in the market and now is the time for canning them. There are so many uses for pears that a crate or two of them will, no doubt, find their way to most households. First of all aren't they the most delicious things imaginable to eat raw. They are splendid canned, pear preserves are delicious and I remember, with a "watering of the mouth" the pears spiced whole with their stems still on, which my grandmother used to serve—truly I never ate anything better.

Little Stories for Bedtime

Little Pete in Fear Holds His Breath.

By Thornton W. Burgess.
(Copyright, 1913, by J. G. Lloyd.)

"Shall we go down to the old Briar Patch?" asked Reddy Fox.

"Yes," replied old Granny Fox, "we may as well have a look at those young Rabbits and see how they are coming along."

"I hear from Sammy Jay that Peter Rabbit is beginning to teach them instead of letting them play all day long," said Reddy.

"Good!" replied Granny. "Pretty soon one or two of them will think that they know all there is to know and that the old Briar Patch is too small for them. Then we will be likely to have Rabbit dinner."

Reddy smacked his lips in reply, and little cold shivers chased each other up and down, up and down the backbone of Little Pete, for he knew that Granny and Reddy Fox were talking about himself and his little brother and sisters. It would have been bad enough to have heard this if he had been safe in the dear old Briar Patch, but he wasn't. No, sir, he wasn't. He was all, all alone, lost 'way out on the Green Meadows, with nothing but a little bush between him and Granny and Reddy. He held his breath. Yes, indeed, he held his breath, you may be very sure!

It had seemed to Little Pete that he certainly must scream right out when he first heard their voices. You see, he was terribly frightened, and he felt so helpless. But he didn't scream. Just in time he remembered what Peter Rabbit had tried so hard to teach him—that when you see or hear someone of whom you are afraid, but have reason to think that they do not yet see you, the thing to do is to "freeze," that is, sit perfectly still. So Little Pete had held his tongue between his teeth to keep from screaming and then he had sat perfectly still.

Now Little Pete didn't feel at all brave. Oh my, no! He felt anything but brave. And yet he really was doing a very brave thing. He was afraid, terribly afraid, and it seemed as if he just must run—as if his little legs would scamper away from him n spite of all he could do. But he didn't let them. He did just what he had been told he should do — sat perfectly still, all the time hearing those voices come nearer and nearer and nearer until they were right on the other side of the little bush under which he was sitting. There Granny and Reddy Fox took it into their heads to sit down. Little Pete tried harder than ever to hold his breath. He could hear his heart go thump, thump, thump, thump, and it seemed to him that they must surely hear it too.

"Yes," said Reddy, as if he had been thinking about what Granny had said. "Yes, tender young Rabbit would taste good. It certainly would! I haven't had much of anything excepting grasshoppers for a week, and while grasshoppers are very nice when you have enough of them, there is nothing like a change once in a while. I hope Pete Rabbit won't teach those babies of his to be smart as he is. I don't like to own up that any one is too smart for me, but so far Peter has managed to keep out of my way."

"Yes," replied old Granny Fox, and there was an ugly sound to it. "Peter Rabbit has been lucky. He certainly has been lucky. It isn't his smartness, but his luck, that has kept his skin whole so long."

But little Pete knew better. He knew that his father, Peter Rabbit, had been too smart for Granny and Reddy Fox, and suddenly he felt a great pride swelling his heart until he almost forgot to hold his breath.
