

MIXED COMPANY OF IRISH AND AMERICAN PLAYERS IS SELECTED

Fine Cast Chosen for "General John Regan"; Names Well Known.

New York, Sept. 27.—Another instance of George C. Tyler's managerial foresight was his securing of George A. Birmingham's "General John Regan" some months prior to the commencement of its wonderfully successful all-season run at the Apollo theatre, London.

The Liebler company had so many big productions on its hands last season that this clever Irish comedy was put off from month to month. This season, however, it will occupy the attention of Mr. Tyler and his associates at the moment their previous successes have been sent on tour.

Who made in Canada her bow upon life's well-known stage, but wisely stepped across the line while yet of tender age? Who did the leading lady stunt for good old James O'Neill and landed next with Sothara, then with Mansfield for a reel?

Who trained with Henry Miller with the sob stuff to the fore and wept salt tears enough the while to fill a reservoir? Who shone too lustreously to stay a shrinking satellite and so ere long burst forth a star in her exclusive right?

Who's taken now to Rosalind and Kate, the suffragette, and other dames Shakespearean? Miss Anglin—Margaret.

For the first time in 10 years, Sothara and Marlowe will this winter make a tour to California in Shakespearean plays. They will, as it happens, be in competition with Mr. Faversham's Shakespeare company, which will also go to the coast this fall.

HOO'S HOO IN STAGELAND

By John W. Carey

WHOSE classic features long have stirred the hearts to song divine? Whose raven locks and lustrous eyes have made the swains to pine?

Who fell before a master's art—soft words—one yes—a veil—some Mendelssohn—"Here comes the bride!"—meets groom at chancel rail?

Who enters next in court room scene? (You've guessed the plot, of course.) "Good morning, judge."

Who thereby joined that well-known guild of girls who've jumped the givens—the Federated Union of Nat Goodwin's Erstwhile Wives?

Who recently was quoted thus, "Nay, nay (repeat), Pauline!" anent reports she's wed again? Miss Elliott—Maxine.

Who's taken now to Rosalind and Kate, the suffragette, and other dames Shakespearean? Miss Anglin—Margaret.

THEATRICAL NOTES

"Joseph and His Brethren" scored a hit in London with George Ralph as Joseph and Beerbohm Tree as Jacob.

It is said that Julian Eltinge will begin his season in "The Fascinating Widow," and will not produce his new play, "Miss Swift of New York," of which he is co-author, until later.

Fiske O'Hara opened his season in "In Old Dublin" in a Wisconsin town the other day. The author of the play is Augustus Pitou, and its story is written around an international yacht race.

Grace George is to star under the management of Charles Frohman in the Barrie playlet, "Half an Hour," given in conjunction with Stanley Houston's drama, "The Younger Generation."

The London critics are divided over the merits of Bernard Shaw's new play, "Androcles and the Lion," a satire on the so-called religious play. Some of the audiences were displeased with the lines and hissed.
