

RARE BLOSSOMS WILL BE ON DISPLAY AT THE SECOND ANNUAL FLOWER SHOW

Officers and committeemen in charge of autumn flower show: 1—F. A. Van Kirk, secretary autumn flower show. 2—J. B. Pilkington, president. 3—O. Tonseth, treasurer. 4—A. J. Clarke, chairman, decorating committee. 5—E. J. Steele, ticket seller. 6—Ralph R. Routledge, chairman publicity committee. 7—James Forbes, chairman general committee.

That Portland is not only the home of the rose, but of practically every other beautiful blossom and rare shrub that grows, will be demonstrated at the second annual show of the Portland Floral society, which is to be held in the Armory, November 11 and 12, for the benefit of the Fruit and Flower mission.

The autumn show will bring forth a bewildering array of wonderful blossoms and luxuriant foliage from the hotbeds and nurseries of the city. There will be particularly fine exhibits of carnations, cyclamens, roses, lilies, violets, lilies of the valley and orchids, but King Chrysanthemum will no doubt reign for this wonderful Japanese blossom will be represented by many varieties, both large and small, of various shapes and all the lovely hues, varying from pure white through the delicate creams, deep yellows, pinks, reds and russets.

A new species of "mum," the "Hiro-delle," will be shown by Clarke Brothers for the first time in Portland. It is a huge golden blossom, with graceful

KLAMATH MARSH LAND MAY BE MADE TO BEAR HARVESTS BY DRAINAGE

Careful Investigation Convinces That Soil Is Fertile Despite Adverse Reports.

(Special to The Journal.)
Klamath Falls, Or., Oct. 23.—The drainage of the marsh lands on the Lower Klamath lake is now probable. At the inception of the Klamath Reclamation project the reclaiming of these lands was one of the major features of the work to be accomplished by the government. It is estimated that between 80,000 and 100,000 acres of tule lands border the lower Klamath. The fertility and productiveness of the marsh lands has been a mooted question for several years. The government made limited experiments on a tract of land donated by Abel Ady for an experimental farm. Some of the experts pronounced the soils unfit for farming and advised the abandonment of the reclamation of the tule lands. This marsh land owners were not satisfied with the reports made by men in the employ of the reclamation service and continued experiments at their own expense. Samples of soils were sent to various experts on the Pacific coast. The results from the experiments and the reports from the experts employed by various agricultural colleges were more than satisfactory.

Blocked by Canal Owners.
The swamp land owners formed an organization and have for the past three years endeavored to get the government interested in taking up this part of the project again. The chief drawback to the drainage of the marsh is the fact that the Van Brimmer irrigating canal, which supplies water for about 3,000 acres of land, takes its water supply from the Lower Klamath. The government canal has simple water to supply these lands, but it has been impossible for the marsh land men to arrange to have the Van Brimmer ditch supplied from the main canal of the Klamath project.

When the Southern Pacific company built its dike across the marsh, through Abel Ady, an arrangement was made to install gates at the channel so that the flood waters of the Klamath river, which back into the Lower Klamath lake, could be shut out. Ady at that time controlled the greater part of the marsh lands and laid the foundation for the reclamation of the vast body of land that will greatly enhance the wealth of Klamath county. Had the plans proposed by Ady at that time been followed the swamps bordering the Lower Klamath would today be fertile farms and provide forage for thousands of cattle.

Consent of Action.
The recent favorable action on the part of the interior department may lead to an understanding between the reclamation service and the Klamath Water Users' association. The directors of the association have joined hands with the marsh land owners and have been urging the interior department to make an arrangement whereby the Van Brimmer irrigating system will be supplied with water from the main canal of the Klamath project.

Should the marsh lands of the Klamath country be reclaimed it will be another decided triumph for Abel Ady, who may now be appropriately termed the "marsh king." Even though Ady was forced to sacrifice all of his swamp lands he has continued the fight to get the lands reclaimed.

To Develop Power.
Ady is also leading the fight to get the power in connection with the Klamath project developed at an early date. He desires that the operation of the plant and the site of the power be placed in the hands of the Klamath Water Users' association and not in the hands of the city of Klamath Falls or any other corporation or municipality that might be governed directly or indirectly by outside influences in fixing the price to be charged for power.

It is the contention of Mr. Ady and the water users that the government owes it to bench land owners to supply power for pumping water on their lands at actual cost. Many of the bench land owners bought their holdings with the explicit understanding that the government would irrigate them. It is very probable that any arrangement that the reclamation service may undertake to sell power to the city of Klamath Falls without going through the hands of the Klamath Water Users' association will meet with bitter opposition from the water users.
