Ithis Dansants was a tremendous success. The men were there in apite of all the fears to the contrary. The dancing was lovely, graceful and wonderfully rhythmic. Never has a theatrical diva had the clever press introduction that the tango has enjoyed. There has been through all the praise that suggestion of a somethe praise that suggestion of a some-thing not quite as it should be. When the People's Institute announced their intention of promoting Thes Dansant, the uninitiated gasped, raised their eye-brows and bought a dollar ticket for the first meeting at the Portland yesterdsy. As a consequence the original plan te have the dancing in the grille with fables on either side where tea would be served in a leisurely manner, was impossible. would be served in a lessurely manner, was impossible. They counted without their host on the curlosity that was consuming the public. The grille was or would have been filled to capacity had they not perforce retained the center floor for the dancers. Tea was served to the content of the c in the main dining room and no one was sorry for the confusion as the crush spelled success with a capital "S" for spelled success with a capital one of the worthy charities of the city. Portland is ever and anon so prim and careful, which is as it should be, of course, yet the tango had a universal sanction yesterday at its initial presentation, in public, as a ballroom dance. Also the "Boston," "Hesitation Waltz," and countless variations of these dances that were eleverly danced by the professionals who contributed to the entertainment of the guests. Especially de lightful was the tango by Miss Raze and Mr. MacDonald.

After 5:30 the many spectators began to thin out the young people of the smart set fell to their own enjoyment of the dance. Among the clever dancers among them were Miss Claire Wilcox.

All the friends of Attorney William C. Bristol know he is a busy man. Whether he was as rushed as this story seems to indicate is a question. Not forgetting the time-honored newspaper phrase, "It has been reported that" last night Mr. Bristol was in a great hurry to close up some business in his office preparatory to departure on the 8 o'clock train for Montana, where he has been called to try a case.

It was past 6 o'clock when he finished dictation and plunged out of his office in the Wilcox building and made for the elevator. The lift was upward bound He gazed at it on its skyward flight without hesitation turned one floor down and waited.

A short time later the elevator going down stopped, he entered, and the surprised elevator boy said:
"Wiy, Mr. Bristol, how do you happen to be on this floor?"

The lawyer looked at the youth pity-

"Study your arithmetic," said he. "Deem't it take the elevater longer to drop five stories than four? You were going up and I was going down. By events. Mrs. Margaret Hollister gave walking one flight down, I enable you to get me to the ground floor sooner."

And now the boy, unconvinced, is reading of Lytle's poem, "Antony and waiting for Mr. Bristol to return and Cleopatra." One of the especially developed by the beauty of grown and the convenient whether he was serious or grown. explain whether he was serious or spoke
