

POULTRY SHOW BRINGS TOGETHER BIG ARRAY DESPITE COMPETITION

With Two Like Events in Progress in Northwest There Are 177 Exhibitors.

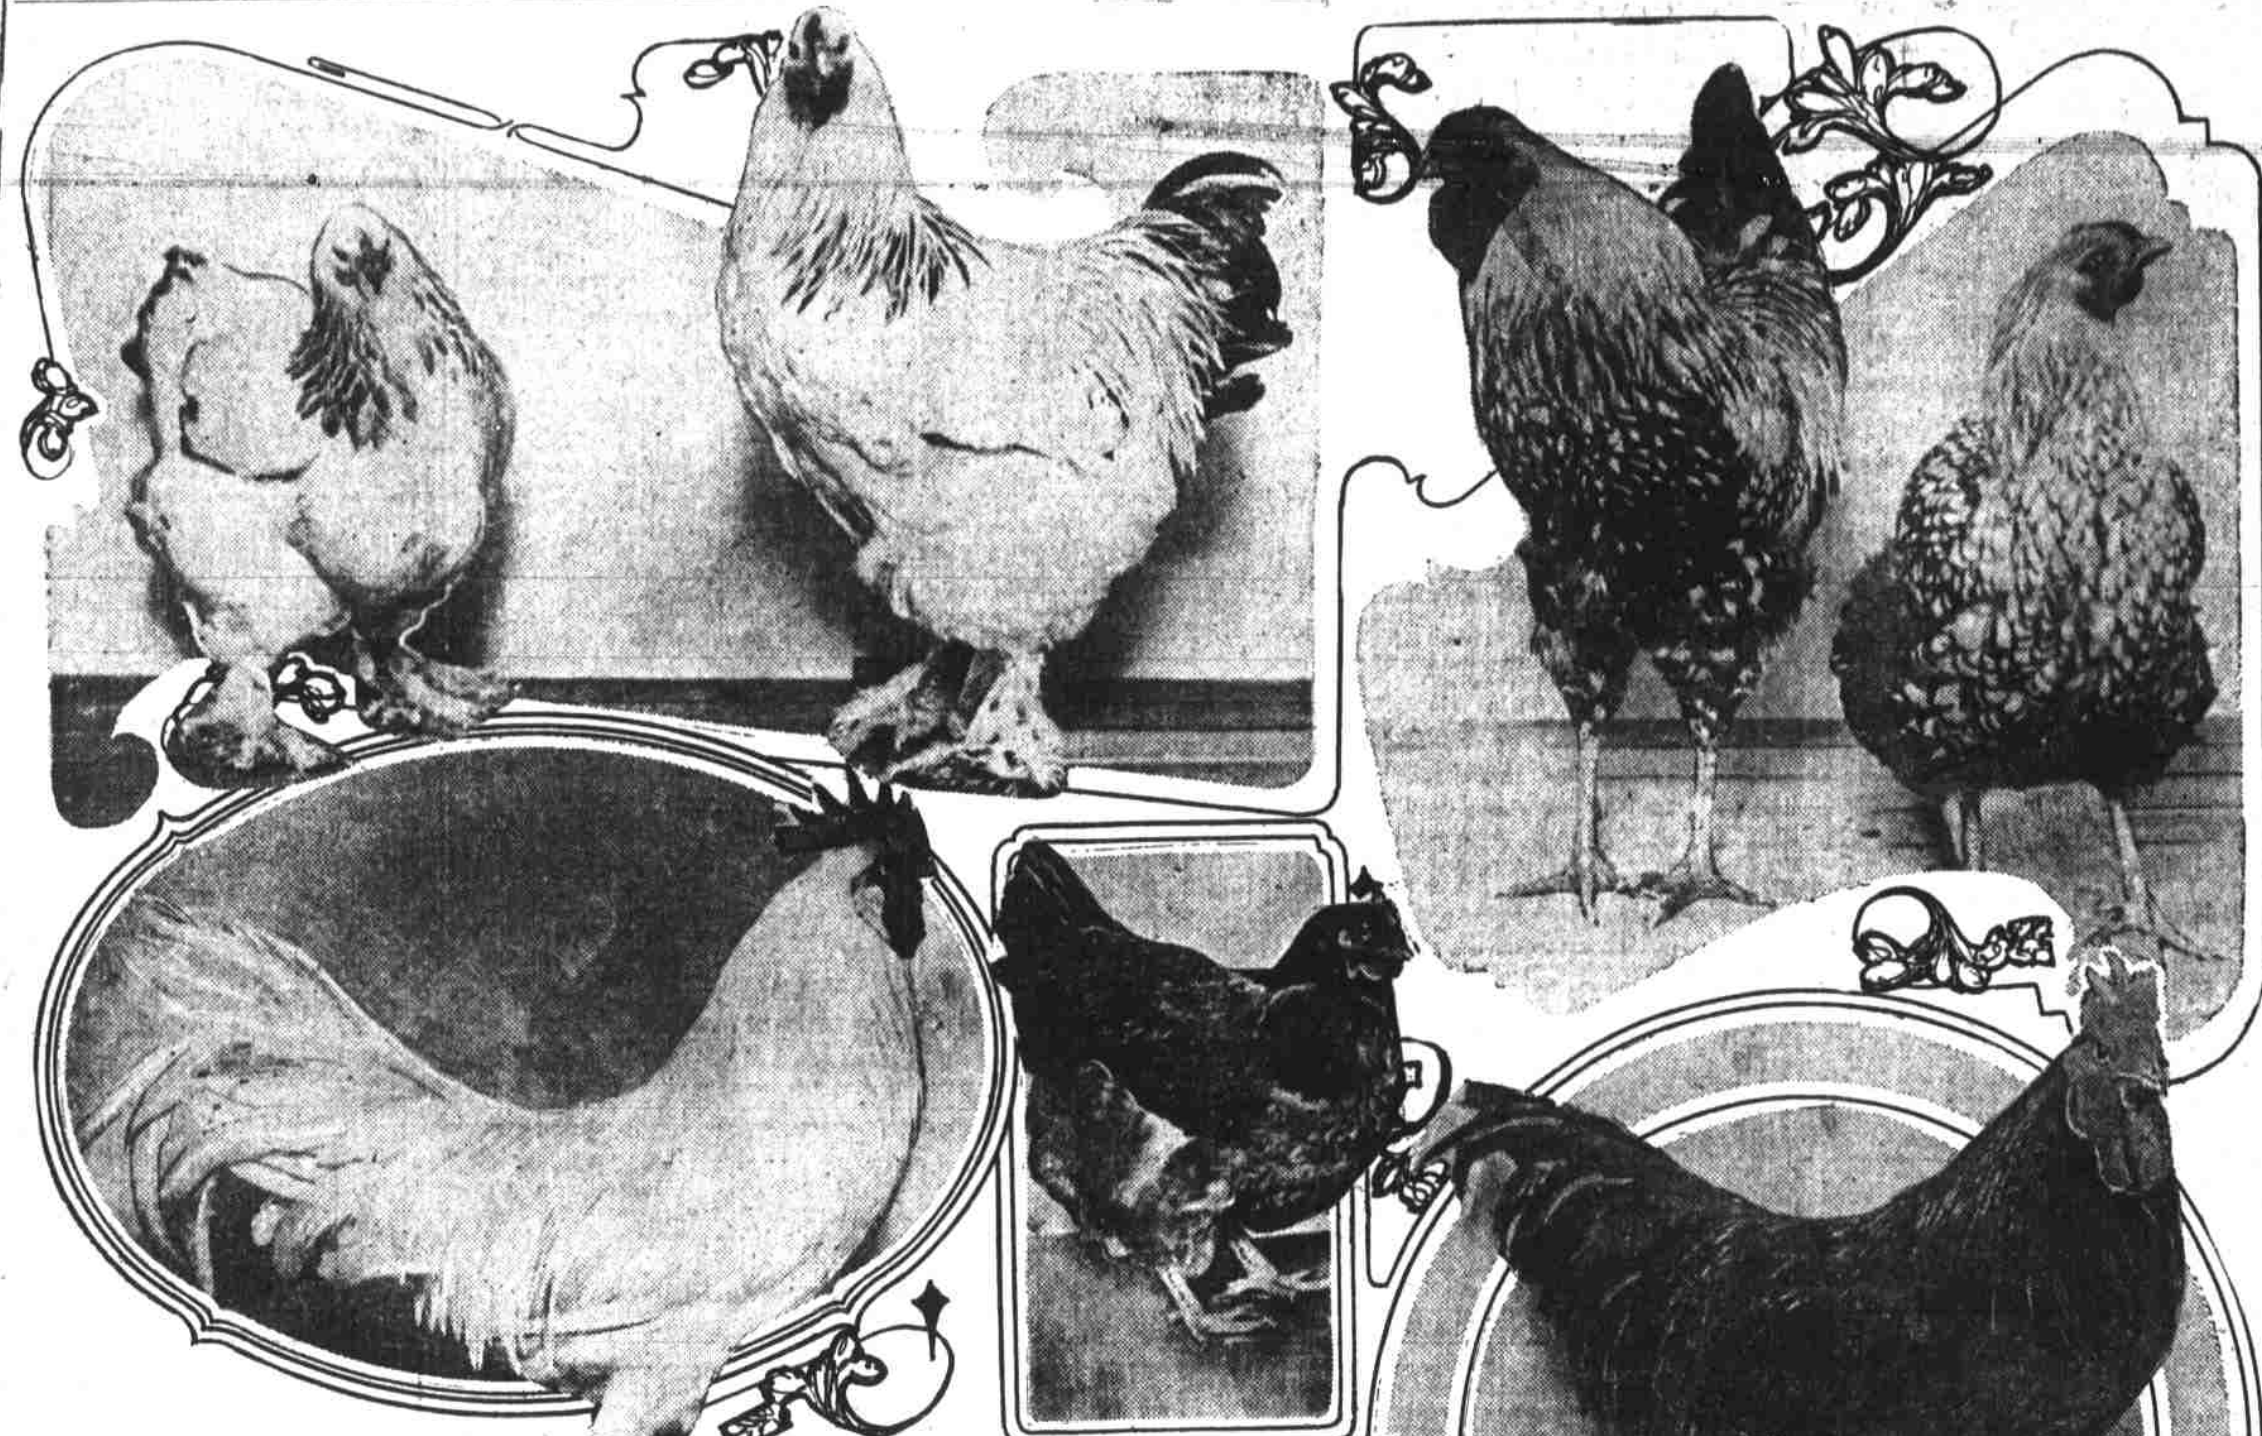

In spite of the fact that there are now two other poultry shows in the northwest in progress, the Oregon Poultry and Pet Stock association show, being held in Portland, attracted 177 exhibitors, who have placed more than 1000 birds on exhibition.

The show is by no means confined to chickens, however, for there are pigeons, turkeys, geese, rabbits, guinea pigs, ducks, pheasants and song birds to be seen at the show.

One of the biggest features is the fine display of stock feed and poultry farm equipment, presented in much better form than heretofore.

- The exhibitors at this show are as follows:

SOME OF THOROUGHbred BIRDS ON EXHIBITION AT POULTRY SHOW

BIG RAVEN WHICH IS EXHIBITED AT POULTRY SHOW ODD CHARACTER

His Ability to Imitate Frequently Deceives Owner—Plays Numerous Pranks.

190 years, and are very seclusive, preferring to live alone except at mating time.

Tom has a spread of nearly three feet, and there is not one odd color on him, even his tongue and the roof of his mouth being coal black. "We have had him three years, and in spite of his trouble he is a great pet," said the owner.

"Old Black Tom," a huge raven, owned and exhibited by young Leonard H. Cressdon of 1962 East Ninth street north, is one of the main attractions at the poultry show in spite of his aversion to talking, due probably to the unseemly bawling noises that fill the new falling building.

When in the humor, which is most of the time when he is at home, Tom can talk, sing, whistle, crow, bark and imitate noises, much to the amusement of spectators and to the discomfort of the mother of the owner, who is often deceived by Tom's noises. Neighbors will often call to Mrs. Cressdon and Tom has learned to imitate the call so well that Mrs. Cressdon is constantly rushing to the door in order not to offend the neighbors in case it is they signaling. The noise of the cleaning one's feet on a wire doormat has been so thoroughly imitated that often Mrs. Cressdon imagines she is about to receive guests.

Tom has a very decided liking for being tickled as far down the throat as Mr. Cressdon can force his finger, and Tom will stand for 10 or 15 minutes to enjoy those caresses. When Mr. Cressdon is tired of petting the bird in that manner, and attempts to pull his finger out, Tom will shut down hard enough to prevent him doing so, except very gradually.

When hungry, Tom is very much pleased to have two or three mice dished up to him. He will take them in his bill, crush the bones, and gorge them whole, but if he is not hungry he will carefully skin the animal and select only the choicest bits of meat.

He is the constant source of worry to the small boys in the neighborhood, for he will steal their marbles and hide them under leaves or grass. If the boys do not pay him proper tribute he will gently but firmly pinch their legs with his monster beak. If the boy happens to wear long trousers, Tom will carefully lift the leg far enough to reach the sock, and he will take hold just a little harder for the trouble he has been put to.

"Scientists have declared the raven to be the most intelligent member of the bird family, and this raven has amply proven this assertion," said Mr. Cressdon. "They live between 80 and President of Association Declares It Is Best One Ever Held in Pacific Northwest.

"I have been connected with poultry shows for 15 years and I can safely say that I believe this one to be the best ever pulled off in Portland or in the northwest," said E. H. Bauer, president of the Oregon Poultry and Pet Stock association. "Some of the finest birds I ever saw in my life are on display here now, some of them being valued at $150 or $200. The show represents at least $20,000 worth of poultry, although I know it is hard for the man not familiar with the poultry business to realize this. It has cost about $2500 to put on this show, and that is another hard thing to realize.

"A big feature is the record time which the judging was done. Two days completed the work, and then came a marked catalogue, an innovation.

"The general impression prevails that this show is on the high road and that from now on better and better shows will result. With all due respect to the older members of this organization, I must say that the success of this show is due to a very great extent to the new members that have recently been added to the association. New blood always infuses new energies and the results of this year prove this conclusively. In paying compliments, I am not overlooking the press, which has been a most important factor.

"There is a big demand for the eggs that are laid here during this show, and I might add that all are eating and not throwing eggs.

"This show is a great educational feature and we do not hesitate to say that our efforts are for better poultry. We can prove that thoroughbred poultry will produce more eggs and better market stock than ordinary stock, for it is certain that a fancier takes great interest in bringing his stock to the highest state of efficiency.

"Haphazard methods are always deplorable. Poultry is certain to become run down, and it has been plainly demonstrated that mongrel stock do not pay for their feed," concluded the president, an anxious exhibitor called him away to pass his opinion of a pen of chickens.

14-YEAR-OLD LAD IS WINNER OF 16 RIBBONS

Youthful Breeder of Guinea Pigs Has Large Display at Poultry Show.

Sixteen ribbons, representing eight first and second awards, and two silver cups, one given by the Oregon hotel and the other by the Oregon Poultry and Pet Stock association, were won by Maurice R. Mann, the 14-year-old son of John Mann, by his display of guinea pigs at the poultry show now in progress. Maurice is therefore a quite contented individual.

To the credit of this young American, it is said that his exhibit is the largest and has the greatest variety of any display ever made. The selection is made from the largest guinea pig farm in the west, where Mann has more than 300 cavies, which he is breeding for experimental purposes. His stock is in great demand with doctors, and college students and professors.

The most select feature of his exhibit is a group of four black cavies, the only ones in the west. The display includes many new breeds never before seen, that have resulted in careful attention to developing the broods. In one cage is a mother and six little ones, none of which resemble each other in marking, in the least. In another cage is a display of iron gray and white cavies, a new and distinctive breed.

An unfortunate feature developed during the show Monday. After all the ribbons had been posted a vandal attempted to steal the blue ribbons. He was detected, however, and a close watch is being kept to see that nothing of the like is repeated.

POULTRY PEOPLE WILL MEET AT BANQUET

Extensive plans are being made for the banquet to be held tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock by the Oregon Poultry & Pet Stock association at the Oregon hotel to which all poultry raisers and others interested in the industry are invited.

E. H. Bauer, president of the association, will preside at the banquet, and W. L. Fulmer, secretary of the association, will have charge of affairs.

IMPORTER OF PIGEONS IS PROUD OF EXHIBIT

L. A. Hart of 1075 East Fourteenth street north, one of the first men in the northwest to import the Carmeaux pigeon, is one of the product exhibitors at the Oregon Poultry and Pet Stock association show now being held in the new falling building, his display being some of the finest pigeons ever seen in Portland.

In commenting on his birds Mr. Hart said: "The Carmeaux is one of the most thrifty birds ever brought to the west. A pair will raise from 9 to 11 birds each year and in some cases I have known them to produce 12 squabs." For show and market purposes they are superior to any other bird, being much larger and their meat much whiter.

This breed has attracted a great deal of attention among the members of the Oregon Squab association, of which I am a member and they are appreciating more and more their value."
